When burning the forest is good

The controlled burn of 44 hectares of cleared forest was originally planned for last fall, but very strict weather and soil conditions must be met for a safe and effective burn. These conditions were satisfied only as late as Wednesday, August 6.

The controlled burn by the B.C. Forest Service of 44 hectares of forest was specifically done to slow the regrowth of vegetation. Once the land is burned the planting of conifer seedlings can be begin.

On August 6, 44 hectares of logged and cleared forest in the Ring Creek Drainage were methodically set afire by spreading a semi-solid form of gasoline from a specially out-fitted helicopter.

Last summer's heat wave created a grave situation in local forests for forest fire hazards. The wildfires that swept B.C. last summer were costly and devastating.

But the Professional Foresters in B.C. may soon be advocating forest fires of a different sort - prescribed burning.

Prescribed fire plays a key role in reforestation and protection. Some of the reasons for prescribed burning include reducing the fire hazard and risk of wildfire, facilitating tree planters or for natural regeneration by removing debris and exposing the soil, lessening the need for herbicide use, and improving nutrient availability.

In addition, prescribed burning is used to reduce costs. Such burning is usually less costly and less environmentally damaging than mechanical removal of logging slash.

Prescribed burning may also reduce disease. Prescribed burning may be essential to eliminate future sources of infection from diseases such as mistletoe.

Prescribed burning is strictly controlled to avoid damage to soil, or threat of fire spread or health hazard. A permit which specifies conditions of fire must be obtained from the Ministry of Forests. These permits are suspended when smoke builds up.

Therefore, properly managed and controlled, prescribed fire is an important part of forest management. It greatly reduces the chance of wildfires and promotes the establishment of a healthy new forest.

New volunteer deputy chief appointed

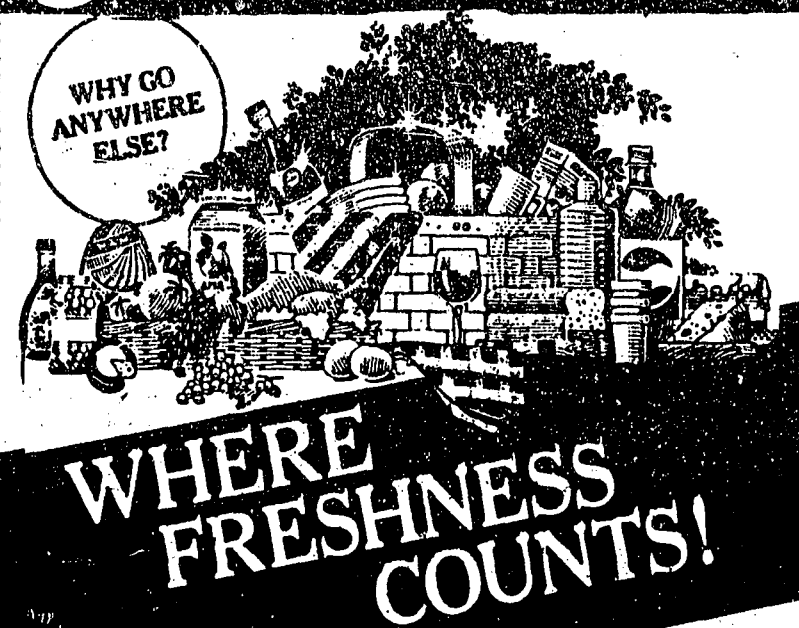

Council approved the appointment of Captain Christopher French as Volunteer Deputy Chief of the Squamish Fire Department.

Council gave its approval upon recommendation from Fire Chief Pat Hampson, who along with the Officer's Board, made the appointment.

French was a former member of the District Fire Department from 1975 to 1977 and since then has been a volunteer firefighter.

In a memo to council, Hampson praised French, saying he enjoys the respect of his peers and subordinates.

SQUAMISH'S STORE FOR THE 80's

New commercial centre to feature three restaurants

Artist's concept of the new convenience centre proposed for the entrance to Squamish. The centre will feature three restaurants, a gas bar, and a convenience store. Squamish council gave the project approval-in-principle at last week's meeting.

Squamish council gave approval-in-principle Aug. 5 to a new commercial development for the entrance to town that will feature three restaurants, a gas bar and convenience store.

According to Gordon Walker, development manager for NASCCO (North American Shopping Centre Company Ltd.), who appeared before council on behalf of the developer, there will be three restaurants - two fast food outlets and a sit-down establishment - at the centre proposed for the northwest entrance to town.

Alderman Norm Verner expressed concern that the restaurants will take business away from restaurants in the downtown core.

"I'm not against progress," Verner said, "but I feel uncomfortable. We're writing a death toll for other restaurants in town."

Walker defended the proposal, however, saying the development will bring customers into town who would otherwise just drive past Squamish.

"We don't want to take business from downtown," Walker told council.

Alderman Corinne Lonsdale concurred with Walker: "In long term, it will not have a detrimental effect on the downtown core."

Walker produced an artist's concept of the proposed development which will be constructed on approximately two acres at the entrance to town. He said the concept represents about eight months of study and negotiations with the Department of Highways and local municipal staff.

The development will cater to the highway traffic enroute to Whistler, Walker told council.

"We want to flag the travelling public down," he said. "Let them stick their nose down Cleveland Ave."

Walker said the development will contribute to the overall downtown revitalization of Squamish and will generate anywhere from $30,000 to $60,000 in taxation revenues to the municipality. In addition, he said the project will employ 100 to 120 people and that the developer will entertain bids from local contractors for the construction.

Walker added that he believed the development would act as a "nucleus" for future development in the area.

"We have the feeling that council is in favor of commercial development when it is beneficial to the community," Walker said.

Squamish council voted to accept the proposal in principle, with Verner voting against the motion.

Speaking in favor of the motion, Lonsdale cited the job and spin-off potential of the development as beneficial to Squamish.

"A hundred jobs is a hundred jobs," she said.

Added Mayor Egon Tobus: "Squamish has tremendous potential. Now is the time to get into position."

Prior to the proposal coming before council for approval-in-principle, the Technical Planning Committee studied the proposal and submitted a report to council addressing some of their concerns.

Some of the concerns raised over the proposal include possible traffic congestion, concern over logging trucks turning onto Loggers Lane, and the potential of increased motor vehicle accidents.

Despite such concerns, however, the Committee stated in its report to council that the proposal was "a viable and desirable development at the entrance to town."

The Committee cited the benefits of the proposal as including an enhancement of the town's entrance, future development of the area to the north, the downtown area would benefit as it would draw tourists downtown, increased taxation, and the creation of about 100 full and part-time jobs.

NASCCO is now required to provide further studies for the area as well as dimensions and distances of all access routes to the development. In addition, the developer must make formal application for rezoning the property from Industrial 3 to accommodate the project.

About 300 employees at the Squamish division of Weldwood of Canada Ltd. are continuing in their strike action started July 31 as part of an expanding job action taken throughout the province by the International Woodworkers of America. The Squamish division joined other Weldwood operations across B.C. as targeted companies included in the IWA strategy.

Weldwood strikers say they will continue to picket the site until a negotiated settlement is reached. Principle issues in the dispute are pensions and contracting out-of-union work to non-union contractors.

"It's the employer's move now; we're waiting for them," said Walter Kosiz, spokesman for IWA Local 1-71.

"The Weldwood operation is the only Squamish one down now, but if talks don't get started again soon other operations in the Squamish area could be shut down," Kosiz added.

But according to IWA President Jack Munro, industry solidarity is cracking. Munro said small sawmill operators are circumventing the company negotiators by signing separate letters of memoranda with the union.

"F.I.R. is very upset with these signings, and have gone to the Labour Relations Board. We know it's a futile move, so we're not worried about it," Kosiz said.

Kosiz added the companies that have signed will not be picketed.

"It's not just the small operator that's signed," he continued. "Doman Industries, a large company, a member of F.I.R., signed Tuesday (Aug. 5)."

The 31,000-member union currently has 14,000 members on strike throughout the province, but the union remains somewhat optimistic.

"We are hopeful because the number of companies breaking ranks is slowly increasing," Kosiz said.

Council responds to airport distress

Council voted at the Aug. 5 meeting to take $7,000 from the contingency account to repair the runway at the Squamish Airport which is threatened with losing its licence due to the ill condition of the facilities.

The money will be used to fill cracks in the runway's blacktop and clear brush and small trees at the end of the runway.

Council made its decision to bail out the airport after receiving a plea for aid from the Squamish Flying Club. According to Kerry Brown, president of the Club, the airport was inspected last December by the federal Air Navigation Standards and Procedures Branch who indicated that although the deficiencies in the condition of the airport are relatively minor, if they are not corrected the airport could lose its operating licence.

In a letter to council, Brown said the runway suffered considerable deterioration over the winter.

"The Squamish Flying Club is of the opinion that the damage is such that we might not pass the next airport inspection."

Brown added that the Club, which works to maintain the airport, does not have sufficient funds to repair the runway. Brown appealed to council to come to the airport's assistance, adding, "The loss of the airport licence would adversely affect the running of the airport."

Brown appeared before council Aug. 5 to further request council's assistance in repairing the runway.

Members of council unanimously spoke in favor of coming to the airport's aid.

"I would be supportive of council helping out," Alderman Ron Barr said. "It is a municipal airport."

Said Alderman Norm Verner: "It's not just a rich man's hobby; it's a service to the community."

Added Mayor Egon Tobus: "We have shunned spending any money there. Our choice is whether to spend some money or see it sink. Past councils have negated their responsibilities to look after the place," he added.

Council passed a motion to spend $7,000 on the airport which will include filling cracks in the runway and clearing the end of the runway of brush. Council also voted to engage the services of Interprovincial Traffic Services to undertake the runway filling. At the same time, the company will fill other cracks in the municipality. Funds previously allotted by council to upgrade the entrance to the airport will now be applied towards the runway upgrade.

Sewer equipment needs costly repair

The municipality will soon be faced with a costly repair bill due to the unexpected breakdown of two pieces of equipment at the Mamquam Sewer Treatment Plant.

Council approved the expenditure of $15,000, to come from the Sewer Fund Contingency and prior years' sewer surplus, to repair two centrifugal blowers which must be shipped to Ontario for the work to be done, at a cost of $7,500 each.

The blowers supply air to the settling tanks in the sewer plant and were originally installed by a Vancouver firm 13 years ago. John Payne, works superintendent, told council that the Ontario company is the closest place where the blowers can be repaired.

In the meantime, Payne said he transferred one of the good blowers from the Central Sewer Treatment Plant to the Mamquam Plant. Payne warned council that this gives each plant the absolute minimum equipment and allows no back-up for breakdown.

Three injured in head-on collision

Three people were injured in a head-on collision involving a motor home and motor vehicle just two miles north of Culliton Creek on Highway 99 Aug. 2.

The driver of the southbound vehicle, Christopher Bruce Allen, 50, of Vancouver, and passengers James Megannety, 36 of Niagara Falls, Ont., and Trevor Bergh, 15, of North Vancouver, were taken to Squamish General Hospital with undisclosed injuries.

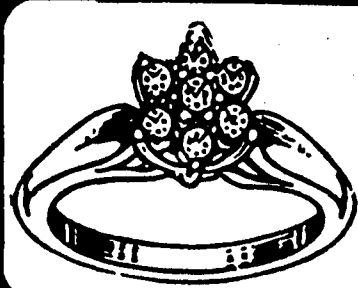

The driver of the northbound motor home, Stanley Noga, 64, of Port Coquitlam, and his family, were taken to Squamish Hospital and later released.

Members of the Squamish Fire Department were called to the scene of the accident where they used the "Jaws of Life" to extricate one passenger.

Investigation into the accident is continuing. No charges have been laid.

Council re-appoints commission members

Council voted to re-appoint three long-standing members of the Advisory Planning Commission despite the effort of some council members to infuse "new blood" into the commission.

Council made its decision to re-appoint the members despite a list of seven names of individuals who responded to an advertisement in a January issue of The Times calling for individuals interested in sitting on the commission to submit their names.

Several members of the council, however, made unsuccessful attempts to have new members appointed to the commission.

Alderman Robert Ewacha, speaking against the motion to re-appoint the three incumbents, suggested council limit the number of consecutive terms a member can hold on the commission.

"It gets pretty stale after 20 years", Ewacha said.

Alderman Norm Verner

proposed council expand the present commission by one number to allow the appointment of a new member.

"It'll get new blood in," Verner said. "We do need some input." Verner's attempt to put the proposal to motion, however, was defeated.

Mayor Egon Tobus also spoke in favor of new members and chastised council for allowing the commission vacancies to be advertised when it intended to re-appoint the incumbents.

"You make it hard for new people to show interest in the municipality," Tobus said.

But other members of council defended the reappointments.

Alderman Ron Barr reminded council he had served as alderman for eight years.

"It's like saying 'get rid of me' because I've been on council for eight years," Barr said, adding that it would be an "injustice" to "kick out" the three incumbents.

Alderman Corinne Lonsdale concurred with Barr.

"The three have the experience," Lonsdale said. "I would feel uncomfortable asking any of them to step down."

Added Alderman Dave Stewart, speaking against the motion to expand the commission by one member:

"We're doing fine; just leave it alone."

Loggers Sports partygoers "QUIET"

It seems Squamish Days and Loggers Sports partygoers enjoyed a great weekend without getting into too much trouble.

St. Sgt. Dan Leroux of the Squamish Detachment of the RCMP said residents and police members alike enjoyed a "fairly quiet weekend."

According to Leroux, seven 24-hour roadside suspensions were issued over the weekend as well as two impaired driving charges. Leroux said most complaints received by the police were alcohol-related "but nothing serious."

Police conducted a roadblock at the entrance to the Civic Centre parking lot following the Loggers Stomp on Aug. 2.

We did it again!

Even the weather co-operated and this year's Squamish Days celebration was another smashing success. The new events contributed a great deal to the fun, the Timber Queen contestants were as lovely as ever, and the futuristic setting added a novel touch.

The sports events are always exciting and the contestants performed with speed and daring. There were the usual spills and chills as contestants hit the water in the birling pond and the oohs and ahs as the climbers raced to the top of the climbing trees.

The new Friday night format was a success with a lot of people participation. Never since the early days of pajama shopping have there been so many people concentrated in the downtown area.

The parade, well what can you say? It gets bigger and better; the kid's sports drew dozens of decorated bicycles and tricycles and the bike race as well as the 10K run were very well supported. The Lullaby Festival was a lot of fun and the children enjoyed it.

Now that the 29th annual Squamish Days celebration is behind us we can gear up for the 30th and make it bigger and better than ever. Then, in 1988, we can use the fact that it will the 100th year since the founding of Squamish to make it an even bigger and better celebration!

Time

What were your impressions of Squamish Days this year?

Carol Potvin: "It went very well. I like the added pluses for the kids. The turnout was excellent."

Guy Stedman: "I didn't go. I've seen it all before. I was involved in it for five years. It's good for the kids though."

Heather Brygadyr: "I wasn't able to be here. But I certainly think it's a good thing for Squamish. I've always enjoyed them."

Dan Bertrand: "It was very beautiful, like the country here. I'm from Ontario, so it was really a new thing for me."

Hospital proposal

Editor's note: The following is a copy of a letter sent to Jim Nielsen, B.C. Minister of Health and Welfare

Dear Sir:

Two years ago, a beautiful intermediate extended-care facility opened in our community. It is an excellent facility and one one to be proud of.

However we still have a problem. At this time in our small community there is a waiting list of 19 for extended care and 13 for intermediate care. As you well know it is often not too long before the intermediate need becomes a need for extended care.

The government is at present building a new acute hospital in Squamish. The work has just begun. The existing hospital is to be torn down. It would seem to me that with some remodelling and alterations the present hospital could be the answer to this long term care need in our community, and at a relatively low cost compared to a new facility.

I realize the need for intermediate extended care beds is not peculiar to Squamish alone, but the need is desperate-the building is there. What a shame it would be not to take advantage of this situation.

I sincerely hope steps can be taken immediately to help these people who are in need of this very special care without them having to leave their home town, family and friends.

Cartoon promotes ill health

Dear Editor:

I was disturbed to see in your July 29th edition the cartoon captioned, "Wrong table Ma'am. You want the one behind you!"

Not only is this cartoon sexist and distasteful (as Judith Stein points out in her letter), but it promotes the devaluation and ill health of many women who do not fit into our society's "Beauty Queen" image.

As a doctor, I see many women who struggle fruitlessly and often jeopardize their health trying to fit into a very narrow and unrealistically defined "beautiful" stereotype.

Surely these women suffer enough with their consequent low self-esteem without having to be further victimized by the attitude inherent in this cartoon.

Instead, we could perhaps work towards a society where every human being, regardless of color, class, culture, or physical characteristics can have the opportunity to be a beautiful person.

Jan Raymond, M.D.

Recently I received a fascinating document about a survey in the Upper Squamish Valley. The writer, William S. Jemmett, had been commissioned to make a survey of the valley starting where the former survey had terminated and laying out in lots any portions adapted to the requirements of settlers, in other words any arable land.

He made up his survey party and came to Squamish on the S.S. Iona on June 4, 1894. On the following day he took the wagon road to the Indian Reserve about five miles up the valley and after a great deal of trouble, made arrangements for Indians and canoes. The Indians promised to be at the landing early on Monday morning, June 19.

The morning came and no Indians arrived. He went up to the Reserve and the Indians refused to go up the river because of the rough water. They were afraid because an Indian and a canoe had been lost by a previous survey party. However one Indian promised to get some Indians from Vancouver who would go up the river.

Jemmett heard of a Mr. Judd, a rancher who lived in the valley, who had a canoe and was a first-class canoe man so Jemmett made arrangements for him to take him up the river. They started off the same day, the canoes taking up a load of food and the party proceeding on foot, joining the canoe party at a place agreed upon each evening.

"We sometimes struck some pretty good trails but much of the way was through fearfully thick devil's clubs, which here grow to a height of nine to twelve feet or more. On the afternoon of the 25th of June we made camp, about half a mile above our starting point, a pretty good tramp. The canoe had to be towed a great deal of the way up."

Jemmett started work on his survey on June 26. He noted the left bank of the river had been much washed away since the previous survey and he found an Indian Reserve post and blazed a line from it. He noted the closest lots were a pre-emption for a William R. Sarrey, dated May 21, 1892. He noted that the land was a very good sandy loam with some large trees on it but was not heavily timbered. However, he said there were a lot of devil's clubs and they had to bridge a lot of slough, which were too deep and rapid to wade.

On the 5th of July he hurt his foot badly on one of these bridges when a tree broke in the middle from the force of the water. Luckily, he was able to get medical aid and was not delayed long. After he returned from having his foot attended to, he started surveying again and discovered a small piece of good land.

He mentioned the trees on both sides of the river as being cedar, maple, cottonwood, alder, hemlock, fir, spruce, a small quantity of dogwood and crabapple, pine and maple. The land was light sandy loam and alluvial deposit and pretty well covered with various kinds of berry bushes and devil's club.

About half a mile further up the river he found some good, flat land and islands, extending about 10 miles up the river which he subdivided. There were some large trees but the lots were not heavily timbered. He noted that a large fire had passed through the islands a great many years ago as all the very large cedar trees had been burned out with only the large stumps remaining.

The present growth of large trees didn't show any signs of fire.

He then crossed to the left bank of the river and laid out a number of lots containing good land. He noted that there was a small Indian graveyard on one of the lots.

The traverse was at the foot of a very steep rocky mountain and there were a number of low islands, chiefly covered with scrub alder and cottonwood, sand bars and sloughs.

On the right bank he found some good land low and flat with a steep bank along the river. He noted several waterfalls on the west side with some large trees. He also noted some white pine trees about two feet in diameter.

A mile farther north he found some good land which he divided into four lots. Above this he found some steep rocky bluffs. It was here that he ran into some trouble when he was moving camp. One of the canoes, in charge of Indians, was completely smashed up and the entire kitchen outfit and some provisions gone. It took two canoes nearly the whole day to get from camp to camp. Two canoes were lost a short distance up river. Jemmett had to send the other canoe to the mouth of the river and the party had to pack the balance of provisions from Camp 4. One of the Indians left after this but the other stayed with Jemmett.

Once he had completed the survey to this point, he found that he was unable to proceed any further up river because of the state of the water and the number of boulders in the river. He crossed to the left bank, cached his canoe and packed his provisions along the side of the mountain which was steep and rocky. Jemmett had previously blazed the trail to Camp 6. Here, he found the ground very broken up and the timber poor. The bedrock at this site was a kind of sandstone, which he was told was a quartzose sandstone, nearly all silica with a trace of alumina and iron.

Some of the mountains back of the river where there had been some large slides, appeared to be of the same kind of stone. He noted that the ordinary rock along the river was hard and bluish in color.

About a mile north he found some fine cedars for canoes and the Indians immediately made up a couple of shovel-nose canoes. He found a number of good areas of land here and laid out a number of lots. This became the site of Camp 7.

This is the first part of his report and the second part will appear in another column. Jemmett identified the areas by lot number and it might be possible to pick up the numbers from a map but I found it fascinating to try to identify the areas he was speaking about.

Obviously, the one area where he mentions the large waterfalls on the west side of the river must have been opposite the gate to the Tree Farm. That is where Madden's Falls drop down from the mountain tops in a series of long waterfalls and the distinctive crooked shape of Anderson's Falls comes from the entrance to the Clowholm Valley. The other area where he speaks of several islands must have been up by Schoonover's slough and island. He is certainly right about the amount of devil's club. The island and the valley bottom are literally covered with it!

Native Art Show opens at Gallery

"Indian Summer 86" at the Brackendale Art Gallery is featuring through to September the work of Floyd Joseph, the recognized leader of Coast Salish Art.

The art of the Squamish Native Band, part of the Coast Salish culture, "is art of a high order," says Thor Froslev, owner of the Gallery.

"Floyd Joseph in his work with prints," Thor explains, "has revolutionized West Coast native art. He has integrated traditional design motifs and myths with his own visionary and spiritual experience."

Many other artists from the Squamish Native Band are also on exhibition. The most notable are Kelvin Johnston and Rick Harry.

"The Gallery as part of the community," Froslev said, "has a responsibility to present the culture of the native people to our region."

For the collector, two unique prints by Joseph are on display: Dolphins, an original, and Stawamus, the last print of the series.

For the uninitiated, "Indian Summer 86" provides a doorway into the imagination of native artists who are preserving their tradition as well as exploring new ranges of imagination.

Soar ta off

The only thing they had to fear was sunstroke.

For the 47 skippers and crew entered in the Squamish Open Air Regatta (SOAR) held Aug. 9, the hot sunshine, moderate winds, and calm seas meant ideal racing conditions.

And race they did.

This year's seventh annual regatta, hosted by the Squamish Yacht Club, kicked off shortly after the 11 a.m. starting gun at the imaginary starting line just opposite the Squamish Terminals. Sailboats in all five classes jockeyed nervously for position, awaiting the short blast that would signal the start of the day-long race.

First off the mark were the two multihull entrants, Tardis, skippered by K. Uthoff, and Three Beaches, skippered by S. Martin. They were quickly followed by the rest of the pack, all entrants in the PHRF and Cruising classes.

From aboard the press boat, Sand Dollar, skippered by Earl McEwen, Howe Sound soon became awash with white triangular sails, each symmetrically bowed to the wind.

The competitors proceeded unusually quickly southwards along Howe Sound, some lazily tacking from side to side; others experiencing momentary lapses of breeze and frantic seconds of sail-shifting. Crews obeyed their skippers' orders attentively, and shouts of directions echoed the Sound.

After seeing the last boat over the starting line, the Sand Dollar cruised along with the competitors towards Defense Island, the mid-point of the race for the competitors in the Cruising Class.

From an optimal position just yards from the marker at Defense Island, members of the Cruising class competition could be seen rounding the marker and adjusting their sails for the return trip to the finish line, while the remainder of the pack plodded on for Anvil Island, their half-way point.

As these racers approached the Anvil Island marker, crew members could be seen scurrying to ready the sails for the crucial turning maneuver. As each boat cleared the marker, brightly colored

SOAP OPERA WEEK

Hensley's 'World'; 'Restless' soap fan

By Kimberly Redmond

Help! I'm desperate to get information on "As the World Turns" star Jon Hensley, who portrays Holden Snyder. I'd also like his address. — A.B., Eastlake, Ohio.

Jon Hensley

Hensley was born in New Jersey, grew up in Pennsylvania and attended New York University, where he studied journalism. But after a year of college, he embarked upon an acting career. He's worked at Pennsylvania's prestigious Bucks County Playhouse, where he appeared in several stage productions. Hensley has also been featured in many television commercials.

The actor made his television debut in the short-term role of Brody Price on "One Life to Live." He joined "ATWT" in October, 1985. When he's not appearing on the CBS soap, Hensley performs as a vocalist in a '50s rock 'n' roll band.

You can write to Hensley c/o "As the World Turns," CBS, 51 West 51 Street, New York, NY 10019.

I love Terry Lester, the actor who portrays Jack Abbott on "The Young and the Restless." But what's happened to the soap? My husband can predict the outcome of the plot before it happens! — M.B., Lewiston, Maine.

Terry Lester

Perhaps your husband has been watching more soap operas than you suspect. If you're a regular viewer of "Y&R," you can sometimes predict the story line because the show has a tendency to repeat plots that have been already featured on the soap — changing, of course, the character and the situation.

(Have a question about soap operas? Write Kimberly Redmond at 200 Park Ave., Room 602, New York, NY 10166. Questions cannot be answered personally, but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

May wedding at Easter Seal Camp

A small wedding attended by the bride and groom's close family and friends was held at the Lions Easter Seal Camp on May 17.

Sarah Elizabeth Ramus, daughter of Doreen and Ken Ramus of Garibaldi Highlands, and Russell William Lewis, son of Mae and Gordon Lewis of Brackendale, exchanged vows and rings before Marriage Commissioner Joan Hinds at the 5:30 p.m. ceremony.

The area where the wedding and reception was held was decorated with standards of spring lilac and chrysanthemums.

The bride, given in marriage by her parents, chose an elegant sunny gown of flowering polished polyester. It featured a fitted bodice and gathered detail at the shoulders and V-neck. The shoulders were adorned with rows of ruffles and the sweep train was ruffled with a satin ribbon finish. A sprig of white flowers adorned her blonde hair. The four-string necklace of pearls worn by Sarah had a special sentimental value as it had belonged to her maternal grandmother. A bouquet of white carnations, blue chrysanthemums and baby's breath with trailing royal blue ribbon was carried by the bride.

Lori Barrington-Foote as Maid of Honour and Helen Katnich, sister of the bride, as Matron of Honour wore identically styled dresses as that of the bride but in royal blue and three-quarter-length. Each attendant wore a single strand of pearls. Their bouquets were white daisies and blue carnations. The best man was the brother of the groom, Larry Lewis and Jeff Keogan was the usher.

Mrs. Ramus, the bride's mother, chose a pink chiffon street - length dress with dropped waist and pink orchid corsage.

For her son's wedding, Mrs. Lewis wore a blue chiffon street - length two piece dress with white gardenia.

The bouquets and other flower arrangements were by Nicole's Trellis in Garibaldi Highlands.

At the reception following the wedding ceremony, Merwyn Barrington - Foote gave the toast to the bride.

An unexpected but most welcomed guest was the bride's brother, Bruce Ramus, who had just flown in from Australia prior to the ceremony.

Sarah's going-away costume was a white two-piece suit with champagne silk blouse and white gardenia corsage.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are making their home in Pen-ticton.

O.W.L. saves starving hawk

A hawk found locally dying of starvation has been nursed back to health thanks to a non-profit, registered society called O.W.L. (Orphaned Wildlife).

The red-tailed hawk, nicknamed "Hawkeye", was downed in the Squamish area due to starvation, and was turned into the local SPCA where it was cared for for four days.

The SPCA turned Hawkeye over to OWL who cared for the bird for several weeks until he was able to return to the wild successfully. The red-tailed hawk, with a wing span of about four and a half feet and frequently mistaken for an eagle, is ecologically essential for rodent control.

OWL was founded by Jim and Bev Day who were domestic bird breeders before receiving their case, a red-tailed hawk, that was taken to them due to suspected injury and illness. It was at this time, seven years ago, that they realized there was a lack of care facilities for birds of prey.

The Days gained recognition through BCTV a few weeks ago when they were featured on Newshour. Since then, they have been inundated with more birds and many more inquiries. Their philosophy towards these birds is simply to treat the sick and then rehabilitate for eventual release back into the wild.

OWL will be returning to Alice Lake Aug. 16 for the weekend to conduct a public seminar and the rarely seen live release of a four-month-old bald-headed eagle in the Squamish area. Other birds will be on display: Merlin Hawk, Barn Owl, and others.

For further information on this weekend please check with the Alice Lake Parks office. The seminar is free to the public but donations in money or building materials are gratefully accepted.

BELLA VISTA... the toughest of the tough

Usually, in the game of slow-pitch, two things are needed: a calculator to keep up with the score and some sort of stimulant to help keep those poor plate umpires awake.

Nothing can be done to accommodate the latter except perhaps a promise of a trip to the beer gardens after a long weekend looking for strikes, but this weekend 27 teams from all over the Lower Mainland put on one of the best displays of slow-pitch in quite some time.

Sure there were the usual share of blowouts and point marathons, including a "last home run - wins" battle between Boston Pizza and the eventual champion, Bella Vista, won by the latter 9-8. But there were also some great defensive games as the consolation final pitting the local Hospos versus Sudden Impact.

In that match, which saw few runners on base, it took a home run through the gap for Sudden Impact to secure a 2-1 victory.

And what of the final? It provided a show of both offensive and defensive skills. Unfortunately for the North Shore All-Stars, who had gone through undefeated, it was Maple Ridge's Bella Vista that put on the exhibition as the latter squad got a three run home run from male tournament MVP Randy Wagner in the bottom of the fifth to salt away a 5-0 win.

Until the fifth Maple Ridge was holding on to a slim 1-0 advantage, a run scored by Larry Herman on the heels of a Rob Storer single that came in the first. Defensively Storer was a standout as he made several clutch grabs at short stop, but a more crucial moment came in the opening inning as left fielder Dean Quast stuck out his glove to rob the North Shore's Dave Raffel of a two run homer that could have made a difference.

As it was the All-Stars never did get their bats moving after that, putting a total of two runners on base, neither farther than first, before the deciding fifth frame. Overall six All-Stars reached base, half of them in the seventh as they threatened but failed to carry it through.

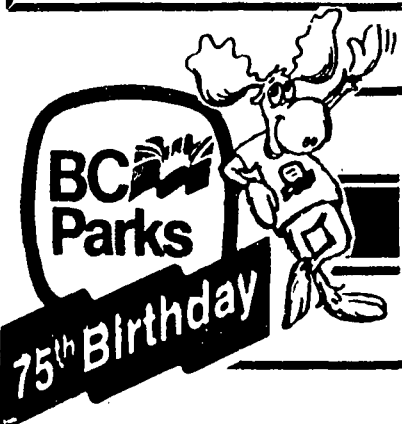

On the other side of the coin Bella Vista had everyone contributing in the scoring right from Wagner and female MVP teammate, Maggie Flynn, to back catcher, Sachi Saito, a Japanese exchange student who has been in Canada barely over a week.

So it was that Saito and her fellow out of towners dominated the weekend as the closest a local side came to the championship round was a respectable third place finish for the Bushrats, leaving Boston Pizza to finish up in fourth.

UPDATE

BY Cathy Dunlop

The hills are alive with vibrant colours. Everywhere you look, there are splashes of purple, red, white, cream, pink and yellow. So where can you see this display of colour? At the Black Tusk meadows in Garibaldi Provincial Park.

In high elevation parks such as Garibaldi, snow falls in October (although it can fall in any month of the year) and remains until mid-July. Flowers take advantage of this short growing season by rushing into bloom. The result are spectacular displays of colour.

Usually there are two major "bloom waves", with the second being most colorful. These blooms vary each year according to climatic conditions.

Right now the two bloom waves are merging together. Later on in August, you won't see the white, cream, or yellow flowers that you see in July, but you will see more purple and red flowers.

White Marsh Marigolds (similar to a Buttercup) are among the first to bloom wherever snow melt accumulates, especially along the shores of small ponds and streams. Nearby, Glacier Lily is often seen pushing its leaf-encased buds up through the snow. At first its head is drooping, but later, its yellow petals bend upward to the sunshine.

Dainty white and pink bells swing from stalks on various heather species. These dwarf evergreen shrubs have unique scale-like leaves that are so tightly pressed together, the twigs look like green pipe cleaners.

Purple - blue Lupine and various shades of Indian Paintbrush are beginning to dominate the colour scheme in the meadows. Both of these plants belong to the second wave bloom. Along with the pea-like Lupine flower, comes its sweet smelling odour. Don't forget to smell the flowers! It will complete your flower experience.

When visiting the meadows at Garibaldi Park, please help to preserve them by staying on marked trails and routes. The meadows are an extremely fragile environment. Both the flowers and soil surface are easily damaged by off-trail hiking.

And please - leave the flowers as you find them so that others may enjoy them as well. Take only pictures.

Huber forms new construction company

At present he is building a house on Plateau Drive in Valleycliffe.

Huber came to Squamish in 1968 to build a chalet for Adi Bauer's Glacier Resorts on Brohm Ridge and remained to go into custom wood-working business.
