Positive reactions to Thursday shopping

Local merchants who have been pressuring Squamish council for Thursday night shopping hours are optimistic that the community will soon benefit from this extra night of service to shoppers.

After some discussion on the Sept. 1 merchant's meeting on the hot shopping issue, council voted to adopt a third reading of the shopping bylaw, which includes both Thursday night shopping and extended Christmas hours in Squamish, with Aldermen Giles and Wilbur voting against it.

Alderman Corinne Lonsdale said that one of the main problems with Thursday night openings is one of consistency. "One of our real concerns was that if one or two stores open, all would have to," she said.

She said she hopes that the merchants can come to some consensus on opening if Thursday night shopping becomes reality.

Referring to a petition on the issue circulated to local merchants by local businessman Jack Fowler, Alderman Brian Giles said that many of the names on it were unrepresentative of the stores that are affected by Thursday night openings, such as gas stations, restaurants, and convenience stores. These stores have less restricted hours than other retail merchants and businesses in Squamish.

Giles also said that "money from Friday nights is virtually non-existent."

On the matter of consistency in merchants' hours, Alderman Chuck Harvey said that "there was consensus of the merchants [at the meeting] that all stores should open at the same time."

"We have a lot of taxpayers who want service," he said, adding that "three hours isn't going to put anybody out of business."

Lonsdale said that the attendance of the merchants' meeting and support of Thursday shopping by four businesses "from the Post Office end of town" (and away from the Chieftain Centre) stands for a change in feeling towards the issue.

Speaking in favor of Thursday openings, Harvey said free enterprise is what the issue is all about.

"If they [the merchants] lose money, they close on Thursdays. It's that simple," he said.

In an interview with the Times the next day, both Fowler and Ron Ballard, Overwaitea manager, said they are optimistic about the final decision on the fourth and final reading of the shopping bylaw, which will be put before council on Sept. 27. If the bylaw is passed, they both said, Squamish can look forward to better service from all merchants in the community.

Referring to the merchants who are still against the added Thursday hours, Fowler said that he foresees few problems.

"I think the public pressure has helped a lot," he said. "I'm very confident we're on our way."

Fowler predicted that the three extra hours on Thursday nights will be "quality hours for family shoppers" who, for a variety of reasons, find weekends and Friday nights inconvenient to shop.

While people in Squamish will always make trips to Vancouver to shop, he said, there is something to be said for improving the service in Squamish so that shoppers are encouraged to shop at home.

"I've looked at the issue from both sides and asked myself if I was being selfish, and I discovered that it wasn't just for me, but for the good of the whole business community in Squamish," said Fowler, who owns and manages Workwear World.

Ballard, who has been pushing for Thursday night shopping since he approached the Chamber of Commerce with a proposal one and a half years ago, is equally positive about council's decision.

"We see some daylight, some progress in the right direction," he said.

Ballard said Thursday afternoons at Overwaitea have been as busy as ever, adding that the extra hours are a positive thing for the consumer and for Squamish.

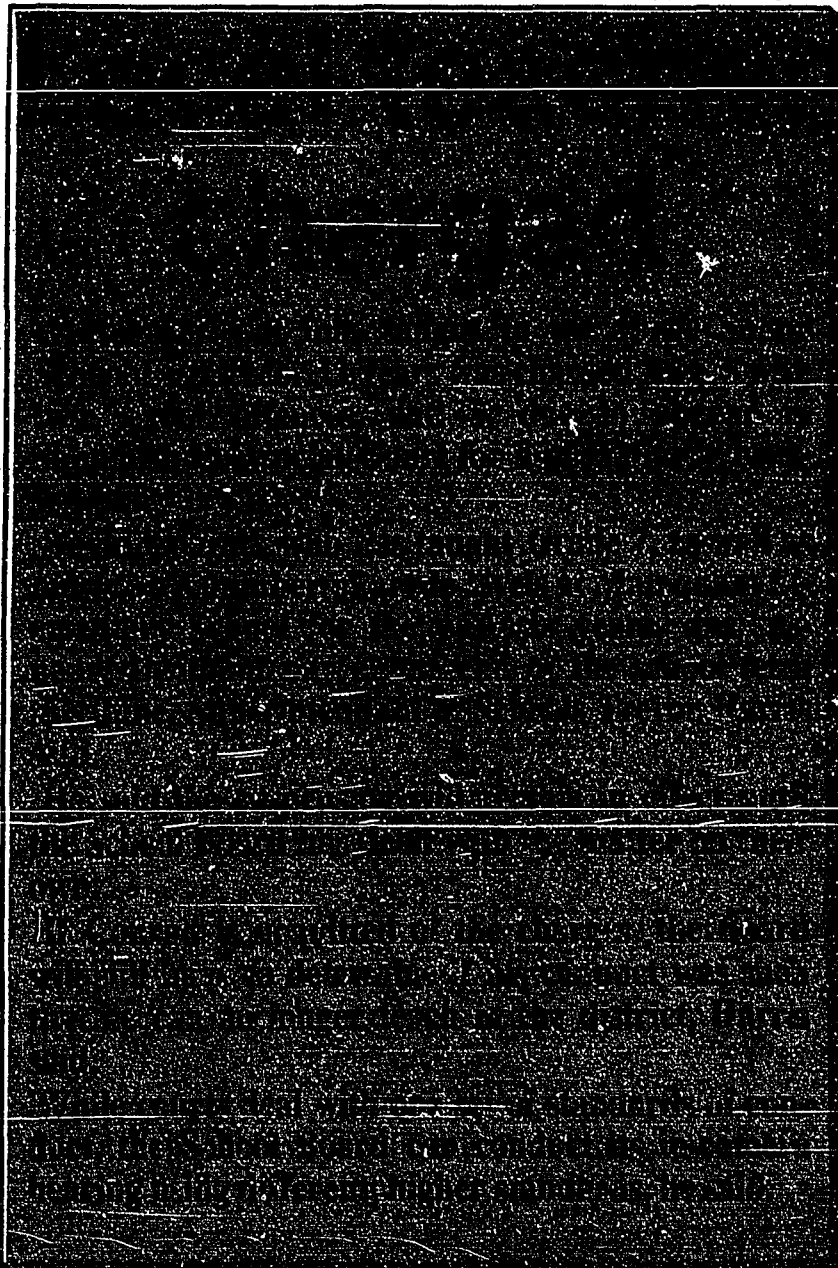

When asked what he thought about accusations that he has been acting out of the interests of a "corporate giant", Ballard said that there will always be people who think that way, and he will continue to stand behind a company that has "been a part of the community for 30 years, and will continue to be part of it for many more."

"They have their reasons, but we're all here to benefit Squamish and earn a living here."

Ballard predicted that Thursday nights will end up busier than Fridays, and that the total effect of the additional hours will be that people will come downtown to shop more often on both nights.

"It's a sensible choice, as far as I'm concerned."

Council lends support to pool

Squamish may yet see an indoor pool built in the community. Squamish council voted Sept.

13 to establish a trust fund for the pool containing $1,000 from the contingency fund, to be used for the eventual construction of the facility.

struction of the facility.

The decision to establish the fund came after some debate by council on the acceptance of the pool by the community.

Last fall's municipal election saw a referendum held on the pool, where two-thirds of Squamish taxpayers voted against the proposal of a leisure pool. 1,517 electors voted "no" to having the Squamish-Lillooet Regional District take on the pool project, with 933 electors voting in favor of the proposal.

But Alderman Chuck Harvey said that the "1,000" who voted in favor of the pool mark a substantial number of people in the community who would still like to see an indoor pool constructed.

"We can simply establish a trust fund to show the people in the community that we recognize their interest," he said.

At an Aug. 25 meeting of the Squamish Pool Committee, it was decided that a "re-thinking and re-looking" at the pool design be done, "with a view to make it suit the needs of the community as well as being efficient and cost effective."

The original pool design included, among other things, a wave machine that would have added an additional $90,000 to the total cost of the pool.

At the meeting the committee also pointed out to Aldermen Ron Barr and Lynn Wilbur, who were in attendance, that the organization finds it difficult to conduct fund raising for the pool project when the municipality does not give it its support.

Attending the Sept. 13 meeting, pool committee member Shirley DeCook reiterated the difficulties of fund-raising without council's backing. She also raised the concern that the pool not become an election issue.

DeCook also said that some people in Squamish are getting the wrong idea about the pool committee's interests in the project.

"People are starting to think that it's our pool; but we're just a committee of people who want a municipal pool," she said.

Pool committee optimistic

With the support of Squamish council behind them in the form of a trust fund set up for a future facility, Squamish Pool Committee members are ready to work with the community in an effort to make plans for a modern pool a reality.

After failing to gain the support of voters at a referendum held last November, those committed to building an indoor pool in Squamish began to take another look at what kind of facility the people of Squamish want, pool committee member Dr. Richard Cudmore said.

At the referendum, two-thirds of the people who turned out to vote said "no" to the proposal of having the Squamish-Lillooet Regional District take on the pool project. Another 933 electors voted in favor of the proposal.

Part of the re-evaluation of the pool project has included changing the name of the group from the Squamish Leisure Pool Society to the Squamish Pool Committee, Cudmore said.

Involved in this change is the hope that people will realize that the group is not acting out of any self-interest, but is "essentially an action group," he said.

Cudmore stressed that the sole purpose of the committee has been to seek council's support in building a pool, and to work with the community to build the pool that they want.

"We're not building a private pool," he said.

The original plans for a "leisure" pool were worked out after a pre-referendum feasibility study was done to determine the type of pool that would service a community the size of Squamish.

The original plans included a $90,000 wave machine that was added because other communities have found that such a feature ensures continued use of a public pool, with a resulting lack of deficit over time.

"But people didn't like it," Cudmore said. "It was something a little bit decadent."

A new plan for the pool will likely include a scaled-down version of the original plan, and will include a six-lane pool and a whirlpool. The latter is a must, Cudmore said, because of the therapeutic use that the community's seniors could make of it.

The price tag for the facility stands at $1.9 million, which is "a really good number", Cudmore said, adding that other communities (such as Grand Forks, which recently constructed a four-lane pool for $1.4 million) are easily used for comparisons in planning a local facility.

With a figure such as $1.9 million, taxpayers must take on a large portion of the financing, he said.

While council could feasibly put away $75,000 this year from the contingency fund, and possibly $250,000 for two subsequent years, Cudmore said, the actual figure left to be paid for by taxpayers could be in the ball park of $600,000, after money has been put aside.

This would translate into about 35 to 40 cents a week, or $30 to $40 of municipal taxes each year, he said.

One thing that people should consider in making a decision to support constructing a pool is the inevitable growth of the town over time, he said.

"This community is growing and is continuing to grow."

Cudmore added that council could look at the pool as part of a long-term set of goals for leisure activities in Squamish.

"We have a group of very talented people who have been working hard on a project that is definitely feasible in this community," he said.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

PCBs stored by six Squamish companies

Polychlorinated biphenyls or PCBs are present in at least six sites in the vicinity of Squamish, according to Environment Canada's PCB inventory.

Weldwood of Canada, B.C. Hydro, Western Pulp Inc., Canadian Occidental Chemicals, B.C. Railway and FMC of Canada Ltd. are all storing PCBs. The largest quantities are stored at Weldwood and B.C. Hydro with 195 litres and 175 litres, respectively.

PCBs were used primarily in industry as insulators and coolants for 50 years until their use was banned in 1977. The danger level for PCB contamination is uncertain, but they have been linked to neurological, respiratory and reproductive problems as well as to cancer in animals.

Recent concerns about the widespread presence of PCBs and the accompanying potential for environmental contamination have led to new federal legislation controlling their storage, transportation and disposal.

B.C. Environment Minister Bruce Strachan said the province is "on top of the toxic waste situation" and that all of the province's PCBs are well-catalogued and safely stored.

But his ministry's plans to build a high-temperature PCB destructor plant in the Ashcroft-Cache Creek area may be delayed by the area's regional district's recently stated intent to seek an inquiry into the matter.

Both local companies with the highest quantities of stored PCBs, Weldwood and B.C. Hydro, are aware of the potential dangers of the substance and have taken steps to keep it safely stored until it is possible to have it destroyed. Both invited the media and members of Squamish council to view their storage facilities.

PCB contaminated oil at Weldwood is stored in steel drums in a large container with thick steel walls. A $2,000 steel liner completes the facility.

B.C. Hydro production supervisor Bill McNeney said the volume of PCBs stored in the province means that it could be some time before any one company can have all of its PCBs destroyed.

"There are four million litres of contaminated oil province-wide and 10,000 capacitor cans containing six litres each," he said.

"You have to get in line for the cleaning site," he said of the present Vancouver facility for treating PCBs. "They establish their priorities, and I'm told I'm in the order of three to five weeks waiting time."

One of the problems facing

B.C. Hydro is the amount of oil-filled, electrical equipment it has which was manufactured in the 1970s and may therefore contain PCBs. All oil-filled equipment must be tested for PCB contamination.

Testing revealed three PCB-contaminated transformers at Hydro's Squamish yard, McNeney said. They are roped off behind a high steel fence and have absorbent matting underneath them to contain leaks.

But the one-time practice of B.C. Hydro and other industries to leave PCBs in dump sites before their danger was known still presents a problem, McNeney said. He said the whereabouts of many such sites remains unknown.

BC Hydro PCBs are in roped off areas behind a padlocked fence. Dark areas are leakage which may contain PCBs.

Cumming resigns from School Board

Celia Cumming

Second term Trustee Celia Cumming shocked the Howe Sound School Board at its Sept. 14 meeting by announcing her resignation.

In a letter submitted to Board members, Education Minister Tony Brummet and the media, Cumming states: "During the past year, I have been increasingly frustrated and dismayed by the bigotted and close-minded attitude of the majority of the board, particularly as it relates to the concerns and the relocation of the Myrtle Philip School."

(Many Whistler residents have been upset in recent years over what they see as Board inaction on the relocation of Myrtle Philip School. The school is overcrowded and sits on land that has been earmarked for use in the expansion of Whistler Village. Three sites for a new school have been suggested but nothing has been decided.)

Cumming's letter also says Board decisions are "unduly influenced by past events and persons and by subjective feelings rather than subjective thought."

Board Chairman Shirley Brown said: "I accept your resignation with regret. I think you did a fine job and showed you love education."

"Thank you for your time served."

Cumming said she will serve on the Board until replaced in November elections.

"I didn't want to cause a by-election and put the taxpayers to extra expense."

Trustee Thelma Johnstone told the meeting she hoped it was thinking about the letter. "The reasons are very important."

After the meeting, Cumming said she regarded herself as a "sacrificial lamb", and hoped her resignation would get the Board to sit up and take notice.

"Whistler is part of the school district and we should be serving Whistler as well."

She said paranoia and "petty local jealousies" have to be overcome.

Asked if she would consider running for the school board again, Cumming said: "Yes, if the attitude of the Board changed and it was more fair. But I wouldn't run immediately."

Teen centre gathers needed support

Community and council support, along with continuing strong attendance, have the staff at the Squamish Teen Centre optimistic about the future.

"I'm excited about the opportunity to work with the young people for the next four months," counsellor Joe Antone said in response to council's decision at its Sept. 13 meeting to provide the centre with $5,000 from the contingency fund for use until Dec. 31.

"I'll take a little bit at a time, but I'll take what I can."

Program supervisor David McMillan said that having funding come up for review from time to time keeps the staff honest.

"It can be a good thing, you have to prove you're doing the job and keep on proving it. Hopefully, from now on they'll see fit to extend us."

At the Sept. 13 council meeting, Ald. Corinne Lonsdale said attendance at the centre had been averaging about 25 teens a night. "It's becoming more and more popular," she said.

"It's something that's really required in this town."

She said the staff had many good ideas and had developed a real rapport with the young people.

Trustee Bob McCormick reported at the Sept. 14 meeting of the Howe Sound School Board that the Squamish Parks and Recreation Commission thought the centre had worked out well and was in full support of the project.

Antone said he is currently trying to establish a leadership group at the centre. He wants to have the teens at the centre elect their peers for such positions as president, vice president and treasurer.

"That way they will have a say in things," he said.

He agreed with Ald. Lonsdale's assertion that nice weather and vacations in the summer may have kept initial attendance down somewhat.

"People will want to get under a roof now," he said. "And we want to provide a nice, warm atmosphere to accommodate their social needs."

Turner to speak to local students

Federal Liberal Leader John Turner has accepted an invitation from the student council at Howe Sound Secondary to attend an assembly at the school.

Turner will speak briefly at a special assembly at 10 a.m. on Thursday, Sept. 22 before engaging in a question-and-answer session with the students.

Students from Brackendale and Pemberton Secondaries will be bussed in for the event.

According to Howe Sound Vice Principal Mike Weeks, there is a great deal of excitement around the school about Turner's visit.

Turner's visit comes in conjunction with a 5:30 p.m. meeting the same day with B.C. Education Minister Tony Brummet at the Union of B.C. Municipalities conference in Whistler.

Galbraith Street mill remains dangerous

An abandoned mill on Galbraith Street in Squamish which houses three industrial capacitors containing as much as 68 litres of PCBs remains in the same run-down condition it was in last September when it was the subject of a Times investigation.

The mill is on property owned by McKay and McCallum Logs Ltd. of Vancouver, and the mill, which has been shut down for three years, was operated by Westech Forest Products of Burnaby.

The site was inspected Sept. 8, 1988 by Peter Krahn, Environment Canada environmental contaminants projects engineer. Krahn had property owner Monty McKay install drip trays beneath the wall-mounted capacitors to guard against leakage. Out-of-service capacitors require more stringent storage procedures, but questions about ownership of those at the Galbraith St. site remain.

Further complicating matters, the 1987 investigation by the Times revealed that Environment Canada records showed the PCBs in question were supposed to be in Prince George.

Krahn remains aware of the Squamish site, and says he is expecting new information from Ottawa Sept. 19 or 20 which may help him deal with the situation. A federal inspector will help him to ascertain if the information will be helpful in dealing with the Galbraith St. mill.

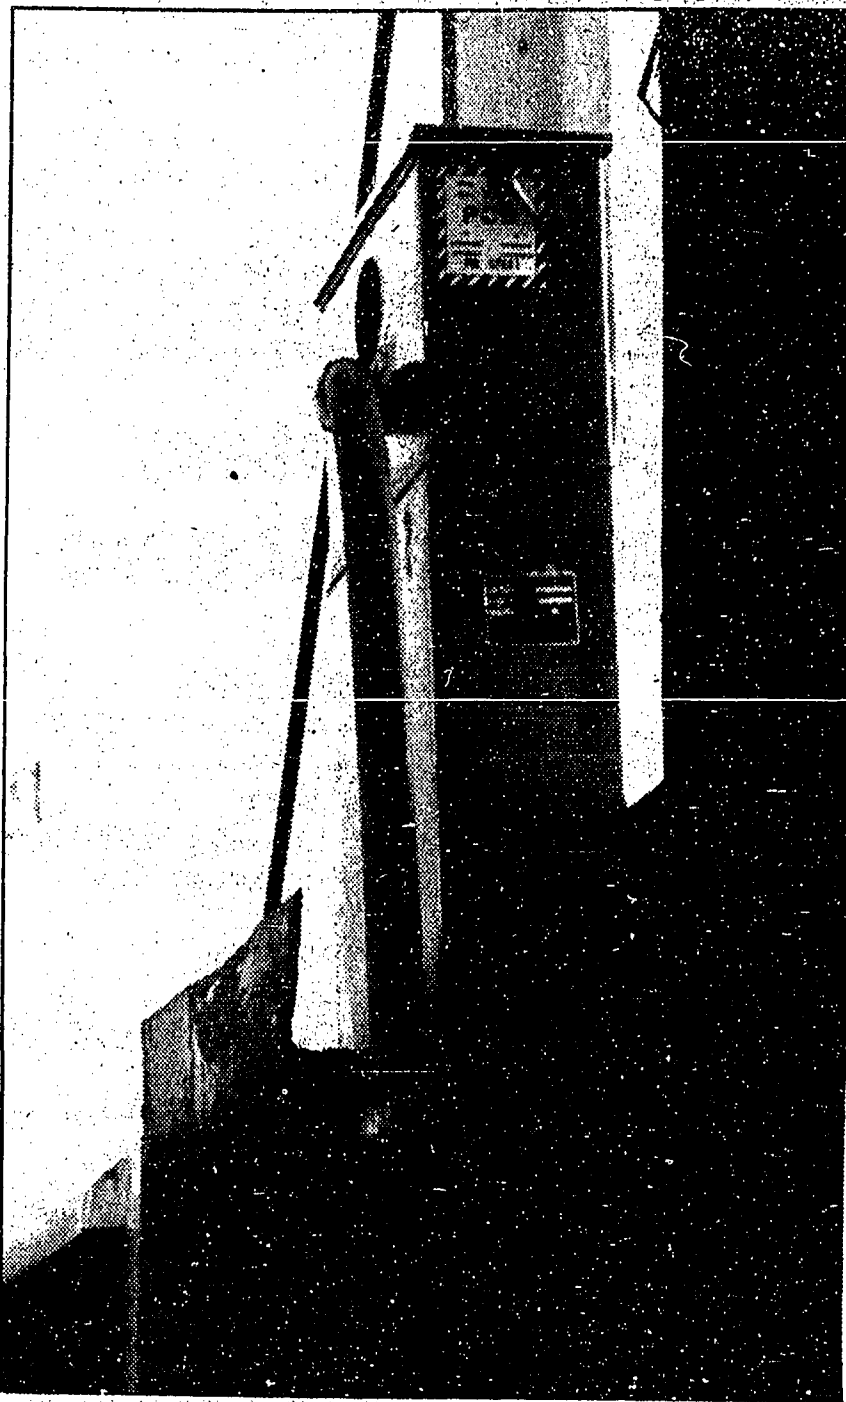

"There is a new regulation for storage of PCBs that the federal government began working on at the beginning of September," Krahn said.

"It deals with the storage of PCB waste. This is critical -- whether the terminology (i.e. 'waste') applies."

A fire in the dilapidated mill would pose a definite hazard, but Fire Chief Pat Hampson said the fire department is "temporarily hamstrung" in dealing with the structure.

The only section of the Fire Safety Act which could be used in dealing with the building applies to a building with people in it or which poses a danger to an adjacent building, Hampson said.

PCBs stored at an abandoned mill in Squamish may be subject to new federal regulations that deal with PCB waste.

Olympics need a long, hard look

Squamish has carved its own little niche in the realm of international athletics over the years, and can currently look to world classers like soccer player Mike Sweeney and skier Mike Carney with pride.

Sept. 16 marked the start of yet another edition of the ultimate in international sports competition in Seoul, South Korea -- a city best known to many North Americans for its proximity to the Mash 4077th -- the Summer Olympics. For all of the misplaced nationalistic fervor they generate, the ideological schisms they open and the bonehead beurocrats they support, most of us wouldn't miss the Games for the world.

They can't keep rolling along in their present haze of beurocratic and political bumbling, however.

Once you get past the boycotts, the jealous threats (in this case from neighbouring North Korea), the political power plays and the barbed wire ambience of the Olympic village, there's nothing quite like seeing the nations of the world meet on the metaphorical battlefield -- it beats the heck out of the real one -- of the sports arena. Sure, you can say the same thing about the Canada Cup and a handful of other events, but none has the timeless mystique and universal appeal of the Olympics.

Nowhere does sport find more heroes or genuine legends.

But the Games have been a travelling road show long enough. We can't begin to put the lid on the spiralling costs and squabbling politics that are progressively threatening the Games unless permanent sites are established for both the summer and winter versions.

Perhaps if cooperation on the funding and administration of permanent sites held more importance than an international bidding war for the four-year bragging rights of being an Olympic host country -- the euphoria of Calgary notwithstanding -- some of what threatens the future of the Olympics may be overcome.

Take Back the Night's time is right

Although the sentiments behind the recent demonstration by a number of local women in "Take Back the Night" are universally held by women's groups, and represent an ongoing struggle for women everywhere, they come at a particularly relevant time in Squamish.

While the feeling likely held by many is that women are generally safer from attacks by strangers in a small community than in the hostile city, Squamish presents a unique case.

With the growth of Whistler and the proximity of the town to Vancouver, the transient population that travels through Squamish continues to grow each year.

While the bulk of these people are the seed from which economic prosperity in Squamish will likely grow, a handful of them are a menace and a danger to citizens.

Squamish RCMP have noted on more than one occasion that manpower could stand an increase to deal with the added caseload that is a result of problems caused by the transient population.

Even if only a few of these cases are rapes, it is still more than enough to prompt the women of Squamish to stand up and protest such violent crimes against women.

While Take Back the Night also speaks loudly against such outrages as battering, sexual harrasment and incest, the main focus seems to be on attacks and rape by strangers.

Since the focus of the annual demonstration is on every woman's ability to walk the streets at night without fear or guilt, perhaps the women involved will eventually take part in prompting action to help insulate the town from the dangers without.

Rage over rural post office bashing

Dear Editor:

The following is an open letter to Prime Minister Brian Mulrooney.

Where are the Conservatives? Is anybody out there? Do they know there's still life after Quebec and Ontario? Do any of them care that Canada Post is still closing the rural post offices and destroying our identities? Do you care?

Mr. Turner and Mr. Broadbent have both stated, in writing, they have no intention of carrying on this practice of rural post office bashing being perpetrated by Canada Post.

Was the "stick it in your left ear" comment emanating from your office, in answer to our petitions, meant to be considered your official communique?

Does this latest "epistle to the plebians" arriving in the mail from Mr. Landers of Canada Post -- and sent at taxpayer's expense -- sound just a wee bit frantic to you? Are we, the rural residents, getting our message across? Does he -- maybe -- begin to realize it is really very difficult when the person doing the walking has a salary "in the range of $175,000 to $205,000 with a possible bonus of 25 percent"? From stamps?

You may think, with an election coming, that rural Canadians are all tied up in knots worrying about the "accord" level at Meech Lake, or whether the Americans will get anything to drink down there -- like water -- but the votes are really hanging right in there Mr. Mulrooney, smuggled up to the Canadian flags that are flying over our small rural post offices.

I just thought you would all like to know where to find them.

Allene Journeay,
Little Fort, B.C.

Cliff Spivey: "I don't like any of them (federal party leaders)."

Shelley Green: "I don't really care for him. I never voted for him."

Mac Macdonald: "He's better than Mulrooney and poorer than Broadbent."

John Jellis: I feel if Turner would resign and let Chretien run we'd all be better off.

Californian fluoride expert to sit on panel

In an attempt to provide a balanced panel at an informational meeting on the effects of adding fluoride to the drinking water, Squamish council has invited a Californian doctor whose research findings conclude that fluoride is a toxic substance that has negligible effects on dental caries.

Alderman Giles provided council with several articles in which Dr. John Lee of Mill Bay, California is quoted on the negative effects of fluoridating drinking water. Among other things, Lee claims that fluoride contributes to the numbers of bone fractures in women, and that more deaths from heart disease, gastrointestinal cancer, flus and pneumonia occur in communities that fluoridate the water.

Lee has accepted Giles' invitation to come to Squamish and sit on the panel at the information meeting.

According to the Health Action Network (HANS), Lee has spent 16 years researching fluoridation and is considered one of the world's foremost authorities. HANS invited Lee to make a submission to the B.C. government caucus on March 22, 1988 after it found, through a recent (as yet unpublished) study by the B.C. provincial Department of Health, that unfluoridated B.C. cities have less dental decay than fluoridated communities.

At the meeting with the B.C. caucus, Lee's presentation included a video on Industrial Fluoride Pollution and a slide presentation.

The date for the informational meeting in Squamish, previously set for Nov. 1, was changed to Nov. 8 in order to accommodate the Californian doctor.

In a Sept. 9 memorandum to council, Clerk Bill Bloxham suggested that the panel not include a pro and con group, but rather stick to the local doctors who have agreed to sit on the panel, along with several other health officials who have also been invited.

"In this way questions can be asked of the panel and the information that is being sought by any person asking the question in all probability can be answered from a pure, medical, knowledgeable, technical point of view," Bloxham said.

Presently, Dr. Skai Stevenson, Dr. Gordon Doyle, and Dr. Richard Cudmore are scheduled to sit on the panel. Dr. Marsh, Provincial Health Officer for this area, and the Director of Dental Health Services from Victoria will also attend and be available to answer questions.

Giles said he disagreed with the idea of limiting the panel to members of the medical community who are obviously in full support of fluoridating the water in Squamish.

"I had a little trouble with this report. This does not represent a fundamental full airing of views," he said.

Bloxham also suggested in the memorandum that the fluoridation issue is based more on the cost to the taxpayer than on the dangers or benefits inherent in fluoride.

"The big question, from what I can see, does not rest so much any more on the pros and cons of fluoride but rather on the expense," he said.

"I beg to differ," Giles said at the Sept. 13 meeting. "Health is more important than expense."

Mayor Egon Tobus at this point reminded the alderman that all memoranda from the administration "ask for guidance."

Following Giles' announcement that Dr. Lee had agreed to attend the informational meeting, council voted in favor of allotting $500 for his travelling and accommodation costs.

"I think it's very important that we have more than the local medical staff at the meeting," said Alderman Corinne Lonsdale, in favor of changing the date of the meeting to accommodate Dr. Lee.

New traffic light slated for '89

A busy intersection that has caused complaints from a number of Squamish citizens has been slated for a traffic light by Squamish council at the recommendation of the Highways Ministry.

While installation of a light at Mamquam Road and Highway 99 will likely not occur for a number of months, council voted Sept. 13 to make an allotment of $25,000 for the light in the 1989 budget. The Ministry will contribute a further $25,000 of the installation cost.

Complaints about the dangerous intersection were raised at a meeting in late 1987, where several people made a presentation to council outlining the need for a light.

As a result, council met with representatives from the Ministry of Transportation and Highways on May 19 this year to express their concerns.

At the Sept. 13 meeting, several council members suggested that an additional pre-warning light be installed at the sharp corner heading north into the Mamquam Road and Highway 99 intersection.

Construction on the traffic light will not begin before April 1989, which is the beginning of the Ministry of Highways' fiscal year.

Mars makes a close encounter

If the sky is clear tonight, you might be able to witness the planet Mars reach its closest point to earth in 70 years.

Due to the converging orbit of the two planets, we have the best view of Mars since 1956 and until the year 2026, a press release from the UBC Observatory says.

Although Mars will reach its closest point to earth tonight, it is already prominent in the evening sky and will remain so into the New Year.

The planet appears just after nightfall as a bright red point of light low in the south-east sky. It rises to about 45 degrees by midnight, and is best viewed through a good pair of binoculars.

Thirty fire calls in August

The Squamish Fire Department responded to a total of 30 calls in the month of August, 18 of which were outdoor fires.

On one call, the department was asked to assist Emergency Health Services in the rescue of an injured climber.

Two motor vehicle accidents resulted in the department being called out for extrications. One of these calls was later cancelled.

The department attended two indoor fires during the month. One was set by a juvenile and caused approximately $2,000 damage. Another was set by a juvenile in a store.

Two structure fires were attended. In a garage fire causing approximately $15,000 damage, arson is suspected. The second fire to a structure was caused when a person left a candle burning on top of papers, which later fell down and caught fire to the rug. Approximately $15,000 damage was done in that incident.

One of the brush fires in the Garibaldi Highlands attended by the fire department took on the proportions of a forest fire. It was brought under control and put out with no damage done to properties there.

Five of the fire calls received by the Squamish Fire Department in August were false alarms.

Map pins down tourist trends

The 5000 pin pricks on the "Pin Your Homeland" map that stood in front of the Chamber of Commerce this summer drove home a few points to Chamber president Wendy Magee.

"I think more marketing is needed in the prairie provinces and the eastern provinces," Magee said. "And I think in the hotels in Whistler the map could be very good as a marketing guide."

The map project, which went from July 20 to the beginning of September, was carried out through a Challenge 88 grant that employed five students from the Squamish area. It included putting data gained from the map into comprehensive tables that can be used to plot marketing strategy.

The five students involved were Wendy Harrison, who has returned to her studies at Simon Fraser University, Alana Chinapen, a University of British Columbia student, Tania Stowe and Shelly Swift, who are both at Capilano College, and Howe Sound Secondary student Debra West.

"The idea was if somebody wanted to do a sales projection, they could look at the figures and see where marketing is needed," Magee said.

She said Doug Banner of Southwest Tour Association had already expressed interest in the project's findings.

One of the attractions Magee noted about the map was that it let people find others who came from the same area.

"A lot of times people would see someone pin England, for example, and they were from England themselves."

The final statistics show Americans, who pierced the map 27.4 per cent of the time, are our most frequent visitors. Canadians, largely Ontarians and to a lesser extent prairie dwellers, came in at 22.8 per cent. Next in line were continental Europeans, followed in order by visitors from the British Isles, Asia and Africa.

Magee and the students kept out-of-place pins to a minimum by keeping an eye on the board and discounting pins in "out of the way places, like the middle of the ocean."

Magee said the project will be continued next year. She would welcome all of her charges back because "they did a terrific job and they made my job a whole lot easier."

Second berth right on schedule

Everything is on schedule for the late-November completion of a second berth terminal at Squamish Terminals, according to traffic manager Ray Wilburn. The $10 million project was begun in mid-April and will feature concrete as opposed to timber construction.

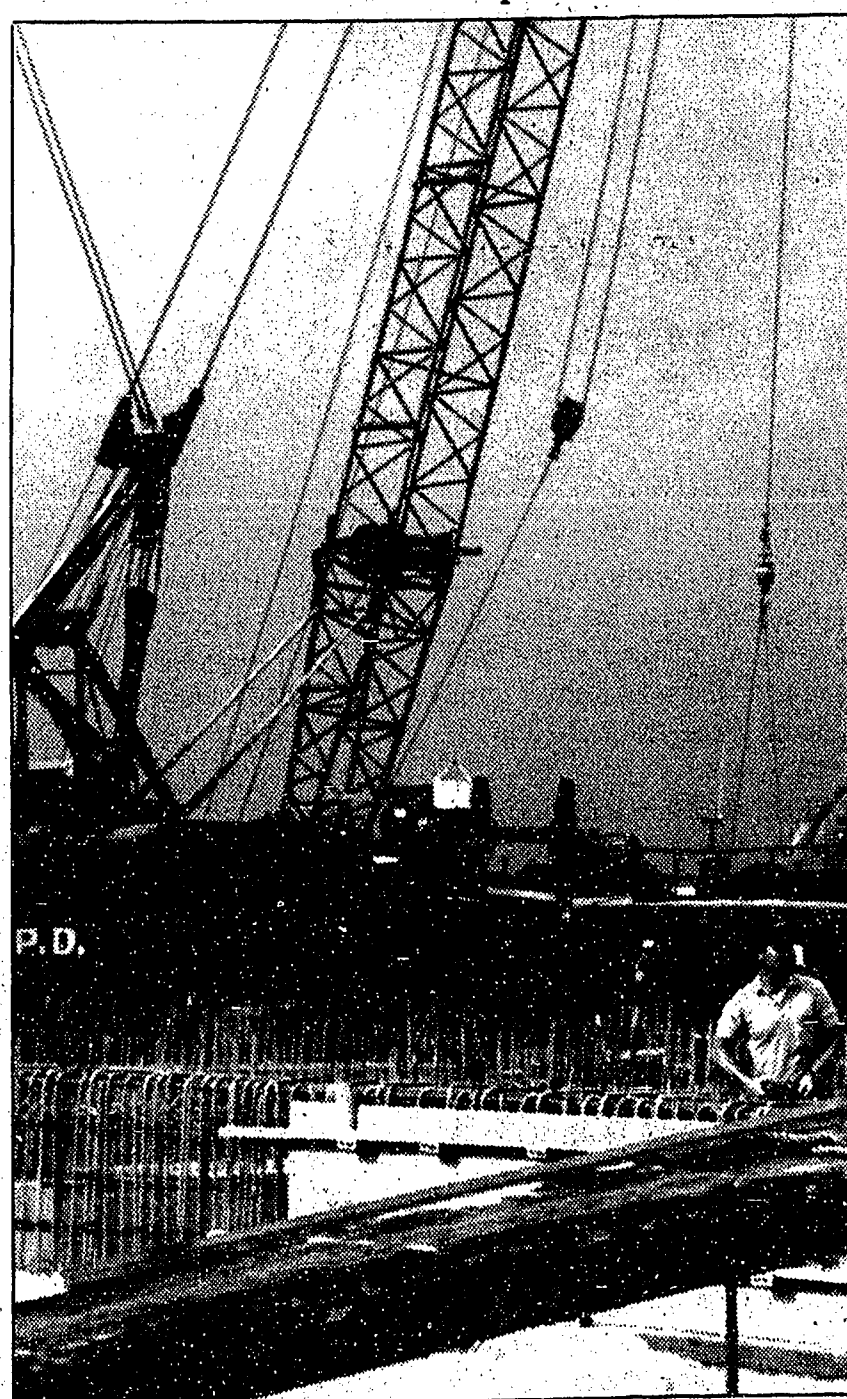

"All the piles are drilled and we're doing the framing," Wilburn said.

The project was undertaken because "business is picking up dramatically", he said, adding that three new contracts had recently been taken on.

Wilburn attributed the increase in business to a solid market for pulp products, the chief commodities handled by Squamish Terminals.

"Burrard Inlet was getting filled up, so we started getting more business," he said. "Last year we were up to 80 per cent capacity at our one berth, and 60 per cent is considered full."

Man and machine work in unison to keep building project at Squamish Terminals on schedule.

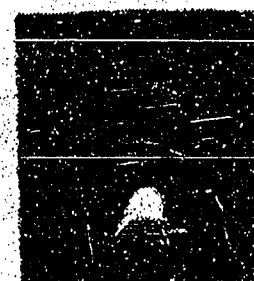

Senior's Corner

It is nearly three months since we last had contact with some of you, and we hope you had a wonderful summer. This has been a busy month getting ready for the Squamish Senior Citizen Centennial Bazaar, being held on Sept. 24 at the Elk's Hall from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Myrtle Herndl, who is the Squamish Centennial Queen, is a member of Branch #70 and will be opening our Bazaar. There will be two door prizes and admission is 50 cents. Prizes in our raffle drawing include a hooked rug, a lap-sized afghan, a tiered cake plate, a butter dish, a patio salad set, a cushion, a crocheted centerpiece, and a playing card set. All are donated by Seniors. Tickets cost 50 cents or three for $1.

It would be appreciated if you would turn in your jams, jellies, pickles, knitted and crocheted goods, crafts and white elephant items, at the meeting tonight at the Elk's Hall (Squamish).

On Saturday, Sept. 24 you can bring your home baking in early so we can be set up for an 11 a.m. start.

There is light at the end of the tunnel.

For example, the mortality rate of cervical cancer has been reduced by a remarkable 79%.

HOWE SOUNDINGS

by Rose Tatlow

We tend to think that white people know everything about plant lore and what trees, plants or shrubs have medicinal use. But long before we came to the west coast, the Indians had many uses for the wild plants which grew around them.

Did you know that they used ferns, trees, bulbs, seaweed, bark, plants and berries in their treatment of ailments? The Kwakiutl around Campbell River had a wide pharmacopeia and were experts in the use of these materials.

Kelp, which grew profusely along the coast, was one of the most useful of plants of the Kwakiutl people. The broad blades were weighted and placed under water at river mouths to catch herring spawn. After the herring had spawned on them, the blades were dried in the sun, bundled up in groups of ten, and stored in boxes for winter use.

The long, hollow strips were used to store oolichan grease and other kinds of oil. They were soaked in fresh water and dried. One end was tied before the grease was put in, then the other end was tied and the tube was coiled and stored in a wooden box.

The tubular strips were also used to make ropes, fishing lines, nets and harpoon lines. As a medicine, damp kelp was heated and applied to the stomach and back of a pregnant woman in hopes that the child would become as slippery as the kelp and delivery would be easy.

Scabs, burns, non-pigmented spots, and sore feet were rubbed with the long leaves of kelp. When a wound bled badly, a small pebble was placed on the artery and tied on with kelp. The powder from dried kelp leaves was rubbed into the child's head to make the hair grow long.

The deer fern root was another medicine. The inner part of the root was taken as a medicine for diarrhea. It was held in the mouth and the saliva was swallowed. Otherwise, it was boiled with the roots of spruce, gooseberry, hemlock, blackberry vines, juniper berries, and licorice fern roots, and the extract was drunk in place of water.

Creeping juniper grows in high places, and is prevalent in the interior. It can be found on the high coastal mountains, and this is where the Kwakiutl found it, for they used it for diarrhea. The berries were boiled with hemlock bark and roots of the deer fern, and the liquid was drunk.

Wood and bark were boiled, sometimes for a whole day, until the gum was given off. This was taken as medicine for short breath and to purify the blood.

The nodding onion, which grows on sea cliffs on Vancouver Island, was a plant whose bulbs were eaten by the Kwakiutl. The plants were marked in spring, and the bulbs dug in August. They were steamed in pits lined with pine boughs and covered with lichens and alder boughs.

The bulbs were also soaked in hot water and applied as a poultice to swellings and sores.

Cascara grew prolifically on the coast, and is one Indian remedy which we use today. The bark of the small woody tree is the source of the drug, cascara, and Kwakiutl and other northwest coast tribes used it as a laxative. The bark was gathered in July, dried, and stored for future use.

It was soaked in boiling water and the extract was drunk. It was used as a medicine for biliousness.

Black hawthorn, which also grows on the Island, was a tree whose leaves were chewed and applied to swellings as poultice.

The goat's beard, which lines the roadsides in June and which is found in open glades in the forest, was another plant which was used as medicine. Roots were collected at Knight Inlet. They were used as a medicine for coughing. The root was dried, soaked, scraped and held in the mouth. It was also rubbed in water and used as soap.

Wild cherry bark was peeled off the tree in long strips. The roots were rubbed on sandstone and held in the mouths of children with canker sores. Ashes of the bark were smeared on the chest of a newborn baby to protect it from rashes and mouth sores.

An extract made by pouring boiling water over the bark and allowing it to steep for awhile, was drunk for tuberculosis, eczema, or heart trouble.

The thimbleberry, a common shrub along the coast, was another plant they used for medicine. The leaves were dried and boiled with blackberry roots and vines, and taken for vomiting and spitting of blood. The leaves were dried and powdered, and sprinkled on wounds to make them heal. The berries were also eaten for internal disorders.

The stinging nettle, believed by early settlers to be a blood purifier, was also used by the Indians. Roots were washed, pounded, and the juice extracted to make a drink for pregnant women who were overdue, to make the baby come faster.

The Indian consumption plant was one whose seed were highly valued as a medicine. Indians around the Fort Rupert and Alert Bay areas obtained them from trade with the Campbell River Kwakiutl and the Coast Salish near Comox and Courtenay.

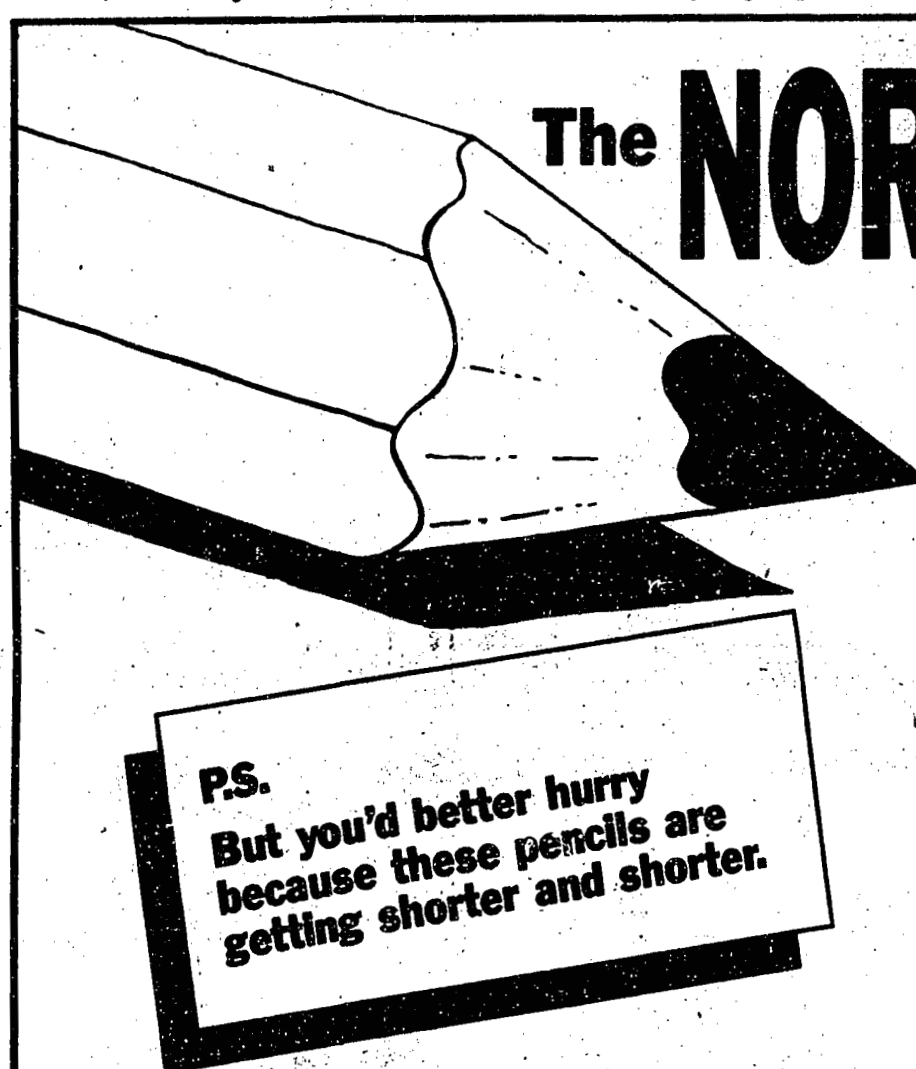

When a man had a carbuncle, his wife would chew the seeds and spit them on the sore, placing a warm skunk cabbage leaf over the top. When a man had a headache, his child would chew up the seeds and blow them on the head of his parent.

Salmonberries were eaten fresh, or oftentimes with oolichan grease.

Thistles were used in Indian medicine. The outer roots of the thistles were dried and held in the mouth to heal gum sores and cankers.

Some of their foods, particularly abalone, wild duck, sturgeon, salmon, and venison, were high on protein; duck and salmon were high in fat; oysters were rich in calcium; huckleberries and raspberries were rich in Vitamin C; wild cherries, blueberries, corn, oysters, raspberries, and salmon were high in Vitamin A; oysters were particularly rich in iron.

The sea and the land provided them with an adequate diet, as well as a source of medicine.

Royal Purple raised hospital nursery

The Order of the Royal Purple, belonging to Squamish Lodge #127, quietly ended an era of dedicated support to the Squamish Hospital nursery with the presentation of a check to the new hospital for the purchase of a burning procedure light. The nursery project was begun 36 years ago when the old Squamish Hospital opened in 1952. A group of young wives and mothers, many of whom are still active in lodge activities, volunteered to furnish and service the nursery of the new facility.

Over the years, the women sewed thousands of curtains, diapers and nighties for the hospital nursery and raised money to buy blankets.

When changes such as terrycloth blankets came into vogue, the ladies of the Royal Purple were always there to answer the call.

Memorial donations started in 1968, for an especially dedicated member formed the basis of the "Crib Fund", which succeeded in replacing old wooden cribs (which had been built by the husband of a Royal Purple member) with more modern steel cribs.

The many fund raisers for the "Crib Fund" included the memorable Ukrainian Nights at the local Legion.

But with the changing times, lodge-type activities have gone out of fashion. So like many service clubs and fraternal organizations, the Royal Purple has had few young members join to share the work of fund raising and other activities.

The building of the new hospital seemed to provide the opportunity to bow out and leave the way open for other arrangements to be made. The group's activities will be confined to other areas in the future.

With the 48 members of the Royal Purple, including 27-year member Mary Crowston, 37-year member Eleanor Dorey and 38-year member Jean McKinnon, voting to spend the last of the "Crib Fund" on the burning procedure light, a proud legacy of service is left.

Squamish represented at international guiding event

Debbie De Vent of Squamish went on one of her most memorable outings as a Girl Guide this summer -- travelling all the way to the Meerdal Forest near Louvain, Belgium to attend an international camp for guides and scouts.

She was one of only eight guides chosen from across the country to represent Girl Guides of Canada at the camp, which was held from Aug. 2 to Aug. 29 as part of the 75th anniversary celebrations of guiding and scouting.

Debbie, who has been involved in Girl Guides for about eight years, is one of 200 local guides and leaders. She has previously represented the community and the country at guiding events in England and Mexico.

The purpose of the camp, according to Debbie, was "to learn about different cultures and lifestyles, share ideas and establish international friendships."

Girl Guides of Canada is made up of 252,000 members -- 47,000 adults and 205,000 girls -- making it the country's largest organization for girls and women. In addition, it is affiliated with the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts, which has 8,500,000 members.

A press release from the national guiding headquarters in Toronto stated that Debbie is "an exceptional young woman who has been chosen to represent Girl Guides of Canada."

It said that only a few of the applications for international events are forwarded to the provincial and subsequently the national selections committee.

Debbie said the application requirements included recommendations from adults both inside and outside guiding, as well as a written submission about the applicant's reasons for wanting to go.

She said the co-ed camp (Boy Scouts were included, too) held 750 people, but the numbers swelled to over 1,000 for one of the highlights of the camp -- a 5-day hike along the Belgian coast and the countryside of Flanders.

Another highlight for Debbie was spelunking, otherwise known as exploring caves.

But the best part of the camp was meeting others from around the world, including Europe, the United States, South America, South Africa, China, Japan and Australia.

Squamish area included in extended deer season

Hunting regulations have been amended to extend most mule (black-tailed) deer seasons in the Lower Mainland region.

Carol Ann Eppele (right) of Brackendale receives her prize of two nights accomodation at the Whistler Fairways Hotel and Resort from Heather Thornton, owner of This Is Your Life health food store on Second Ave. Eppele was one of eighty entrants in the prize draw sponsored by This Is Your Life and the Whistler Fairways Hotel and Resort.

Several of the general open seasons, shown in the hunting regulations booklet as opening Sept. 12, opened two days earlier, on Sept. 10. Some seasons will close later in December.

Management Units affected in the Squamish area are 2-09 to 2-11, with open season on buck mule deer extending from Sept. 10 to Dec. 18. Also included in this open season are Management Units 2-02, the Hope area, and 2-03, Chilliwack.

A shorter open season for buck mule deer, Sept. 10 to Dec. 6, applies to Management Units 2-04 to 2-08, the Mt. Seymour area, and 2-12 to 2-15, which includes the Powell River area and beyond.

In addition, there are special bow and arrow seasons (crossbow prohibited) for mule deer bucks on Bowen Island only, within Management Unit 2-05, from Sept. 3 to Dec. 18, and from Jan. 2 to Jan. 17,

These changes correct a clerical error made in the original regulations, and also bring the deer openings into line with seasons on other game species in the region.

Local artists to be sought

Plans for the Tenth Annual Arts and Crafts Market sponsored by the Squamish Arts Council are well underway, and artists wishing to display their talents are invited to take part in the Nov. 19 and 20 event.

To ensure a high standard of craftsmanship, all items offered for sale in the Market must be juried by a committee at the time of registration.

Registration forms are available from Maureen Brown at 898-3188.

Jurying and registration will take place at the Arts Council Building on Friday, Oct. 28 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Early registrations, now being accepted with a $20 non-refundable deposit, guarantee participants a space (subject to standards committee), and a waiting list is anticipated again this year.

Early registrations may be mailed to Maureen Brown, Box 119, Garibaldi Highlands, B.C., V0N 1T0.

Raffle tickets for craft prizes will be available at various locations around town, as well as at Nov. 19 and 20 Market.

First prize is an all-wool handwoven blanket by Hanne Hansen. Second prize is a watercolor painting by Celia Cumming, and third prize is a number of hand-crafted Christmas ornaments by Sue Pierce. The prizes are currently on display at the Ship's Gallery on Cleveland Avenue.

The prize draw will be made at the Brackendale Art Gallery on Nov. 20.

Give trips more thought, trustee says

School trips offer valuable experiences, to students but should be based on sound educational proposals, says Howe Sound School Board Trustee Peter Rothe.

"I'm getting testy about getting all of these (trip requests) without educational proposals," he said at the Sept. 14 meeting of the Howe Sound School Board.

The Board has received from around the district proposals for two trips to the People's Republic of China during spring break in 1989, and two trips to New York at Christmas.

At issue was a teacher request from Howe Sound Secondary School for one of the spring break excursions to China. The objectives stated in the proposal submitted to the Board are in part as follows: "The current emphasis on the Pacific Rim and the availability of courses in Japanese and Chinese have made it more desirable than ever to have some acquaintance with this specific area and its peoples."

Rothe objected to what he called a "tourist itinerary" accompanying the trip request. "With an itinerary like this, I can choose anywhere -- what is the educational content?"

Included in the 11-day itinerary are visits to the Ming

Tombs, the Great Wall and Sun Yat-sen's mausoleum. Arrangements may also be made to visit a high school at Beijing University.

Rothe added: "I guess people who have the luxury of dollars get to go. If you don't, then life's not fair."

"I'm not against trips as long as the trips are democratic and fair and developed on sound ideas."

Trustee Celia Cumming said she saw nothing wrong with the trip proposal, saying it was preliminary and that the educational focus would develop.

Trustee Ellenore Ross added: "There's a danger of that -- calling for more to be put into the presentation of a trip rather than the trip itself."

The two were backed up by Superintendent of Schools Trevor Harris who said that despite the division of philosophy on the Board, teachers wouldn't go to the trouble of developing a proposal for a trip without first considering educational merit.

But Rothe said he wanted to see more indication of "front end thought."

"If I was going to plan a trip, I wouldn't plan on the basis of a tour and then education afterwards," he said. "Why did they suggest China other than to take a look -- why not somewhere else in the Pacific Rim, why not Japan or the Philippines."

Celia Cumming moved that the proposal be approved and supported in principle. The motion passed with Rothe and Trustee Laurie Laursen dissenting.

ABOUT TOWN

by Maureen Gilmour

Every day of the year we should be thankful that we live in healthy, disease-free bodies. But while we should never stop counting our blessings, we should never stop remembering that others are suffering and we should do everything we can to help. The Red Cross is holding an informational meeting tomorrow night on the Bone Marrow Donor program that is currently operating in Squamish. To find out more about what is involved in donating healthy bone marrow to leukemia patients such as Squamish's Darla Sandberg, come out to the Civic Centre at 7:30. You could be the 1 in 10,000 potential donors whose marrow matches a cancer victim. And you could save a life.

Hans and Irene Berger are very pleased to have Hans' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Berger, here on vacation for the month of September. The couple has travelled all the way from Switzerland to visit Hans and Irene, and of course little granddaughter Valerie.

The Squamish Public Library's Children's Story Hour will be starting up again on Sept. 30. All three year-olds are welcome to come from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m., and four year-olds may come from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. Because of the popularity of the story hour in past years, parents are urged to register soon by calling the library at 892-3110. The story hours and registration are free.

Marg Hammerstrom was the guest of honor Aug. 18 when a group of her friends surprised her with a birthday luncheon at Klahanie Restaurant. She was given a beautiful cake, decorated by Pat Evans, which was enjoyed after gifts were opened. Marg left soon after on a train trip to Prince George to spend a couple of days with her son Michael. On her return she stopped at 150 Mile House and Williams Lake to visit with relatives of her husband Percy.

We hope the following people have happy birthdays this week; Felicia hinde, Robert Lapointe, Kathy Roberts, Alene Drenka, Bryan Allen, Dale Martinsen, Gail Sweet, Jeff Tinney, Brad Collins, Nels Lindquist, Charlotte Vetter, Corina Crane, Cindy Cadwell, Tyler Falt, Trevor Wulff, Glenn Cook, Phillip Blindenbach, Kathy Dinwoodie, Paul Kindree, Tom Egyed, Laura Sikora and Dave Gatzke.

Birthday congrats also to Paula Scott, Margaret Johnson, Neil Mangan, Michael Griffin, Amy and Bo Stembridge, Shannon Price, Lynn Gauthier, Terry Cyr, Maurice Scott, Luke Plunkett, Helen Lehman, Rene Trudeau, Christina Matthews, Kimberly Kiloh, Jackie Wright, Domenic Milia, Gregory Burt, Heather MacKinnon, Donna White, Linda Looyen, Linda Finter, Teresa Langstaff, Gerri Beaulieu, Peggy Tinklin, Michael Mills and Danna Laforest.

Bob Versluis has left Squamish behind to expand his horizons and pursue a career in fast ball in New Zealand, where he will play Senior Men's Fastball for the Auckland Metros until April 1989. Bob is a former player for the Van City Regents.

The Pentecostal Church children's Bible classes begin Oct. 18, and will be held Tuesday mornings from 9:30 to 11:30. Twenty lessons in the fall term will teach the fundamentals of the Christian faith using pictures, colorful material, games, songs and crafts. For information regarding the program and registration, call Karin Ervik at 898-5312.

Come on out and celebrated 100 years of Squamish history at the Centennial Jamboree Oct. 1 at the Civic Centre. This event will be held the same day as the Fall Fair, from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. Tickets are $10 per person and can be purchased from either the Craft Connoisseur, the Times office, or the Country Store. There will be a light snack at 11 p.m. and music will be provided by Chris French. Additional entertainment is also scheduled. For any further information, phone Irene at 898-5628, or contact any member of Beta Sigma Phi. Hope to see you there!

STORK STORY--CHILDS-- Grant and Laura are pleased to announce the birth of their second child, a girl, Alecia Louise, born Aug. 23 at 11:10 a.m. in Grace Hospital. Happy as can be about his new baby sister is brother Jereny. Proud grandparents are Marlene and Earl Leach, and Ruth and Walter Childs, all of Squamish.

September is Big Brothers/Big Sisters Month in Canada. The local organization will be having a "Giant Hot Dog Sale" this Saturday, Sept. 24, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Overwaitea. Hot dogs will sell for 50 cents each. Come out and support a worthy cause and have a tasty hot dog all at once.

Wedding anniversary wishes this week go out to Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Wickstrom, Mr. and Mrs. Mait Carey, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Rush, Mr. and Mrs. David Acorn, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Hales, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Laventure, and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Sadler.

If you have a chance, pick up the July/August issue of Equinox, "the magazine of Canadian Discovery". In it you will find an article that may very well help to put Squamish on the map, titled "Squamish, British Columbia: From Chain Saws to Teahouses".

We would like to thank all those people who have been bringing their grocery receipts and soup wrappers into the Times office. You have been a big help to the Food Bank and we would like to encourage you to keep bringing them in. Anyone else interested in helping the Food Bank are asked to please save their receipts and bring them in to Maureen at the Times office.

A man's gold wedding band was found in the downtown area Sept. 8. To claim it, call 898-9706.

A pair of prescription bifocals with plastic frames was found near Three Beaches at the Furry Creek bridge on Sept. 11. To claim them, call 898-2381.

If you have the time and energy to do some good by volunteering for a good cause, whatever it might be, then here are a few words to give you the extra push you might need to get started: "Service is the rent we pay for our room on earth."

Mr. and Mrs. Ken Mchale of Squamish are happy to announce the engagement of their daughter, Lynn Maureen, to David R. Pasco, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pasco of Pender Harbour, B.C.

The wedding is to take place on Saturday, Sept. 24 at the West Vancouver United Church.

Garden wedding for Colleen and Brent

Christie Colleen Carney, daughter of Owen Carney of Squamish and Sandy Turnbull of Richmond, and Richard Brenton Roche, son of Frank and Linda Roche, both of Squamish, were united in marriage on Saturday, July 16.

The couple chose a beautiful garden setting for their afternoon wedding, which was held at the home of the groom's mother in Garibaldi Estates.

Reverend Chris Burnett officiated the wedding, with musical accompaniment by Linda Morgan, who played the piano while Darlene Kelley sang.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was radiant in an ivory floor-length satin and lace creation. The slim-line gown featured satin shoulder caps, with the bride's waist accentuated by a satin peplum falling to a V for back interest. A walking pleat lined with satin effected a short train. The square neck edged with lace was the ideal frame for the bride's "something borrowed", a string of pearls belonging to her mother. The gown also featured fingertip-length sleeves.

Colleen's headpiece consisted of a short veil coupled with an ivory headpiece, decorated with pearls and satin flowers. She carried a cascading teardrop bouquet filled with orchids, roses, calla lilies, and off-white blooms.

Bridal attendants were Joanne Ingram of Squamish as maid of honor, and Brenda Conn of Squamish, Lisa Farrell and Laura Findlay, both of Vancouver, as bridesmaids. Alexis Horseman acted as Colleen's flower girl. All of the young women were similarly attired in light aqua, mid-calf-length dresses with elbow-length peplum sleeves.

Brenda Newman and baby Felicia.

Mr. and Mrs. Brent Roche.

The groom, best man Steven Bank, and ushers Greg Boyd, Grant Hendrickson and Rob Fleming, all of Squamish, wore grey herringbone tuxedos. The groom's midnight black satin cummerbund and tie contrasted nicely with the bride's ivory dress.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Turnbull chose a fuchsia satin and lace-overlay cocktail length dress. Lace mid-length sleeves and a lace peplum cascading to the hemline at the back were featured. The ensemble was completed by matching satin shoes and bag, and was topped off by a wide brim satin hat edged in seed pearls, with a net overlay and bow. A necklace of seed pearls was the perfect finishing touch.

The groom's mother wore a beautiful champagne beige, mid-calf length chiffon dress with full sleeves.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Royal Canadian Legion Hall, presided over by master of ceremonies Gerry Hutchinson of Langley. The toast to the bride was given by a family friend Jim Kilburn, of Squamish.

The beautifully decorated three-tier cake was created by the groom's aunt, Rene Fritz of Langley.

Out of town guests included grandmother of the groom, Nicolina Dimarzo of San Gabriel, California, the groom's aunt and uncle, Berta and Andy Coffey of Thunder Bay, Ontario, and Cheryl Linley of Toronto.

The happy couple spent their honeymoon in the sunshine at Homby Island, where they enjoyed lazy afternoons of fishing.

Colleen and Brent are making their home in Squamish.

Re-dedication service at Squamish United Church

By Maureen Gilmour

Twenty-five years ago, on Sept. 8, 1963, the new Christian Education Centre at Squamish United Church was officially dedicated when Chairman of the Board Willie Boscariol accepted the keys from architect Frank Whiteley, and builder Martin Halvorson.

To commemorate this occasion, a re-dedication service was held on Sunday, Sept. 11, with Rev. Chris Burnett officiating. Beautiful arrangements of summer flowers graced the altar for this service.

Although Mr. Boscariol was unable to attend the service, he sent a message which was read by the present Board Chairman, Stein Hoff. Boscariol wanted to pay tribute to the builder, the late Martin Halvorson, whose generosity along with that of his partner Reg Maretto, was instrumental in getting the CE Centre built within budget guidelines.

Members of the building committee in 1963 along with Boscariol were Eileen Walton (Kyle), Freda Munro (Clarke), Jack Nelson and Norman Halvorson.

Diaconal Minister Linda Ervin brought greetings and good wishes on behalf of Vancouver Burrard Presbytery.

Messages and good wishes were also received from ministers who had served the church during the past 25 years. They included Rev. Norman Penrose (who took part in the re-dedication service), Rev. Harold Wingfield, Rev. Wayne MacKenzie and Rev. Jack Lindquist.

Special music filled the sanctuary, with the talents of Joanna Schwarz, Carol Finnie and Kelly Smit enjoyed by the large gathering of people.

Other members of the congregation also participated in the service.

A dedicated Anniversary Committee, with members Fern Green, Nancy Hutchinson, June Halvorson and Lynette Halvorson had printed a special booklet entitled "A Journey on Faith", which is a history of Squamish United Church. It was dedicated to the memory of Freda (Munro) Clarke (1907-1983), who was responsible for researching and writing much of the material in this booklet.

A large urn filled with summer flowers was presented to the church in memory of Mrs. Elsie Robertson, who was Shirley Pudney's mother.

Several out of town guests were in attendance, and they, along with members of the congregation, celebrated Communion together to end the service of re-dedication.

Following the service, a delicious luncheon was served by members of the UCW and other women of the congregation.

The anniversary committee arranged a display of photos, photo albums and historical records depicting the life and work of the church. Going through these books was an enjoyable task for many in attendance.

Two anniversary cakes were baked and beautifully decorated by Peg Fairhurst. The honor of cutting into the larger cake was given to Ellen Harley, who in 1961 was the first president of the newly organized United Church Women.

Taking part in the cutting of the special anniversary cake at Squamish United Church Sept. 11 are Reverend Chris Burnett (l), and Ellen Harley, first local president of the United Church Women in 1961.

With a little help from the Squamish Public Library's official mascot, a group 68 local children were encouraged to explore the world of reading this summer.

Taking part in the "Tiger Reading Program", children with an average age of seven read books in groups of five, and were awarded a new stripe on their own cut-out tiger as they completed each set.

In a special end-of-summer party hosted by the library staff and the five Challenge '88 students, the children who had read the most books were awarded prizes, while all children who participated in the program took home certificates.

Taking first prize was David Nerada, 7, who read a whopping 190 books over the summer vacation. Second prize went to Andrea Hoyrup, 8, with 150 books completed. Both children received book prizes from the library.

Third and fourth prize winners, taking home special calendars depicting Canadian art for children, were Janet Vanderhor, 7, with 100 books read, and Aaron Weiss, 6, who read 55.

The Tiger Reading Program was co-ordinated by Marnie Robertson, 16, a Challenge '88 student working at the library.

The regular story hours for 3 and 4 year-olds will begin on Sept. 30 with Maureen Painter.

Unusual fire season in B.C.

Maybe Smokey the Bear is working overtime.

B.C. has experienced one of the most unusual fire seasons on record this summer, the B.C. Forest Service reports.

Despite spells of hot, dry weather this summer, which increased forest fire danger to high and extreme in many parts of southern B.C., the number of fires and the area burned remained well below that of other years.

With most of the April 15 to October 15 fire season over, the Forest Service has logged approximately half the number of fires reported last year at this time. The number of hectares burned is about one-third the area consumed by fire at this date in 1987.

Provincial fire control officer, Dave Hames, said recurring cycles of cool, sometimes moist weather, have repeatedly moderated danger ratings at times when the potential for fires was greatest.

"Although the lower number of fire starts this year is due primarily to the province cooling in the wake of weather disruptions, the reduction in area burned can partially be credited to fast action by initial attack firefighting teams," Hames said.

However, Hames cautioned that the potential for fires still exists, particularly in the southern half of the province.

"We are still many weeks away from closing the books on this fire season, which could easily be extended if dry weather continues into late fall," he said.

Recreationists and other forest users should continue to use fire safety in the woods and be aware of any restrictions that may be imposed on forest use.

Keith Davis, resource officer-protection for the Squamish Fire District, said there are no closures to report right now. The Lions Bay watershed was closed for several weeks this summer due to a high fire danger rating.

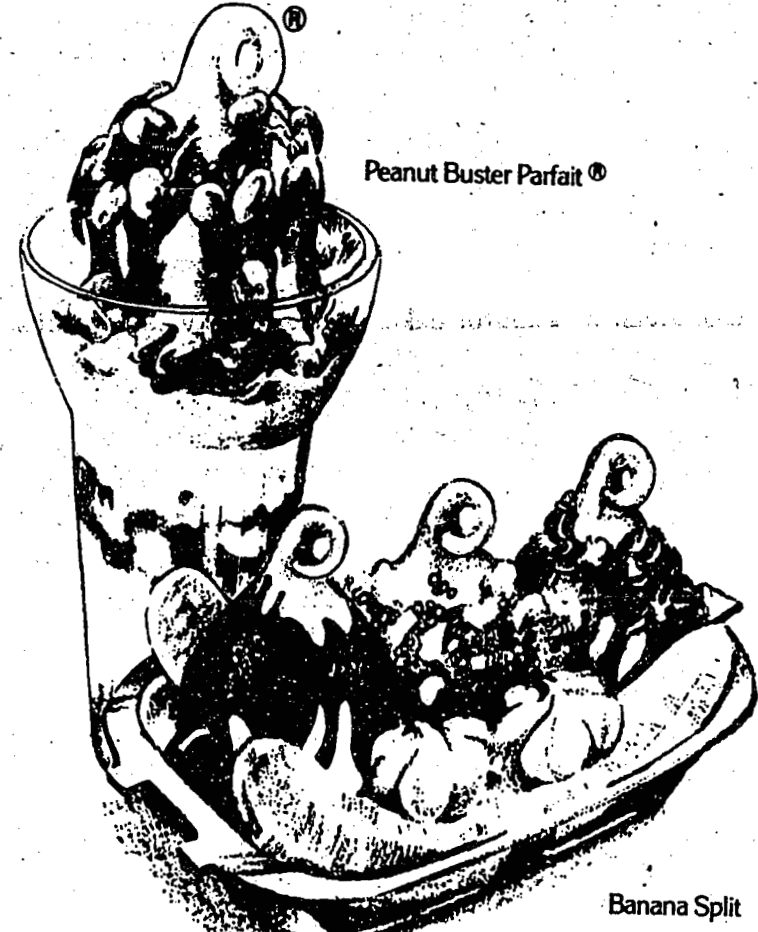

Davis reported there have been 50 fires in the Squamish district as of Sept. 16, resulting in 148.1 hectares being burned at a cost of $828,000 in firefighting expenses. Four fires are burning at present.

At this time last year, the fire total also stood at 50, but only 12 hectares had been burned at a cost of $49,000.

Davis said costs are up this year partly because of a high number of lightning strikes. The strikes tend to be in the back country where firefighting is much more expensive.

Anyone spotting a fire should report it immediately to the nearest Forest Service district office, or dial 0 and ask for Zenith 5555.

Defending champs start season on right foot

The 1987-88 Howe Sound Men's Soccer League playoff final between DeCook Trucking and Klahanie will long be remembered as one of the best title games.

For the latter side the playoffs were full of matches that went down to the wire and beyond, so their victory in the championship contest was a hard fought, well deserved one, especially sweet for a club that was in its first year of existence.

But despite being a rookie team, it was made up of players that were, and still are, known in the soccer circuit, many of whom were veterans of not just the game locally, but of the Vancouver Metro League as well.

On Sunday in the season opener many of those veterans were present as Klahanie started down the trail which they hope will lead to a defence of that title. And while they did figure prominently in the 6-0 drubbing of Corsia Cycles, which went all of the first half and part of the second with just nine men, a few talented newcomers put in their lot.

Besides some ex-Pharmasave players such as Kevin Pederson, Dave Sweeney, and John Stuart, Klahanie has added to their line-up Graham Newell.

Newell was involved in almost all his team's goals, left-footing a second half drive to make it 3-0 after setting up earlier tallies from Terry Hurlbert and Stuart, who went on to collect a hat trick. Spencer Fitschen, who earned the shutout in net, added a penalty shot goal after Newell was taken down in the corner of the box.

Despite the score, however, one win does not a season make, and though Klahanie seems to have the makings of a fine club that will indeed make another run at the title, little could be told on just how strong they are from Sunday's contest.

That of course will be determined in the weeks and months to come, against much stronger and more experienced opposition. Clubs such as DeCook, Local 170, Khalsa, and Mt. Currie have year in and year out made their own runs at the championship, while Brackendale and the Stawamus Braves can never be taken lightly.

DeCook kicked off the new season on a losing note, however, relinquishing five unanswered half goals in a 7-2 defeat at the hands of Mt. Currie. In other games, Local 170 trimmed the Stawamus Braves 3-2 while Khalsa, on a pair of goals by Ian MacDonald, slipped past Brackendale by a similar count.

Swimmer attend Provincials

These young swimmers from the Squamish Aquatic Club fared well at the Provincial Championships held Aug. 18 to 21 in Victoria.

There were 14 swimmers representing the Squamish Aquatic Club at the Provincial Championships in Victoria Aug. 18 to 21.

Two relay teams competed in Division II girls', placing 5th in 200 free, 8th in 200 medley, and 7th in 200 free. Heather Lewis and Becky L'Hirondelle swam for the girls relay team along with Stephanie Holling, who placed 18th in 50 free and 20th in 100 free, and Wendy Drenka, who finished 3rd in consolation finals for 50 fly and 50 back, and 5th in championship finals for 100 I.M.

On the boys' team there were James Holling, also finishing 22nd in 100 breast; Jason Bicknell placing 23rd in 100 fly; Geoff Rawsthorne 24th in 100 fly, and Rusty Dosenburg, placing 22nd in 200 I.M.

There were two first year swimmers competing in 100 free for Division II; Ashley Weber, who placed 8th in consolation finals, and Shea Wynne, who finished 23rd. Chris Koebel also swam for Division II, placing 5th in consolation finals in 50 back, and 20th in 50 breast.

Also swimming well were Lesley Weeks, finishing 19th in 100 breast, Marcy Drenka, who placed 17th in 100 fly, and Nancy Drenka, finishing in 4th place consolation finals for 50 free and 8th place championship finals for 100 back.

For the Regional Relay Teams, Geoff Rawsthorne received a 5th in 200 free, and Nancy Drenka a 1st in 200 free, and Stephanie Holling 4th in 200 free.

Walkers welcome in Squamish Road Run

More and more organized road runs these days are welcoming walkers, and the 12th annual Squamish Road Run is joining the trend.

This year, for the first time, the run will include a walk for those who prefer their fitness to be a little slower-paced.

Now is the time to start preparing for the Oct. 30 event, which has two start times, one for walkers and one for runners. Walkers warm up at 8:20 a.m. and start out at 8:30, and runners warm up at 9 a.m. and take off at 9:15.

The distance of the run/walk is 5 miles, or 8 km.

Winners in each age group will receive medals, and all finishers will receive long-sleeved race t-shirts. Spot prizes will also be given out.

The registration fee is $8 for adults and $6 for students and seniors. After Oct. 28, registration goes up to $9. Forms are available at Stedmans, from Shirley DeCook at HSSS, or from Peter Hotston at Box 388, Garibaldi Highlands.

So get out there and enjoy the crisp fall weather in training for the annual Squamish Road Run/Walk.

Sports Shorts

The 1988-89 soccer season has opened up on all fronts with young and old competing both at home and on the road.

A club that leans to the younger side is Squamish United's under-12 squad coached by Cham Dhalwal. With sponsorships coming from Macleods, McDonalds, Surder, Specialties, Squamish Realty and Overwaitea, the team promises to be around a while, and on Saturday they showed that they will be competitive, as United knocked off Croatia 4-1.

Heiw Nuygun struck twice in the win while John Halvorson, with the game opener, and Jason Bourassa collected singles.

Howe Sound's other youth soccer club, the Terminals, came away with a 1-1 tie against Killarney on Saturday. Christian Oreamuno, who is having a strong year already, opened up the scoring, but Killarney tied it up in the dying moments of the first half.

The Terminals are at home this Saturday at 11 a.m. at Centennial Fields, versus Cliff Avenue.

The Schooner Strikers, fresh off a big victory last weekend at the Hunter's Women's soccer tournament, showed that they were still undefeated, for on Sunday Pharmasave stormed back from a first half 2-0 deficit to earn a 2-2 draw against Academico.

cer tournament, showed the latter squad that it was no fluke as they handed the Squamish women a 6-0 loss.

As the score indicated, the Strikers dominated, but in the first 30 minutes of the second half, Hunters-Pair Tree, in an attempt to get on the board, maintained some pressure inside the Schooner half, but failed to score. Karen Lewis, playing at fullback, was the best player on the day for Squamish, while Nicola Brown, at centerback, also had a strong match.

Lewis and company will be playing at home this Sunday versus the Vancouver Strikers.

Two games into their season in the first division, Squamish Pharmasave is still looking for its first victory.

More importantly, though, is that they are still undefeated, for on Sunday Pharmasave stormed back from a first half 2-0 deficit to earn a 2-2 draw against Academico.

The latter side opened the scoring off a blast from 18 yards out that ricocheted off a pair of players and into the net. A penalty shot doubled that count, but in the second half of what was a tough contest,

Narinder Bir got Squamish on track by firing a penalty shot of his own after Buljit Binning was hauled down in the box.

A well-executed set play then created Pharmasave's second tie in as many games, as Bir touched the ball on to Doug Muir, who in turn sent Imre Sorban in on the keeper for the goal.

Squamish, as are all the other clubs, will be at home this Sunday at 2 p.m. versus the Ambleside Blues in what should be an excellent match.

Meanwhile the Squamish Hotspurs kicked off their season on a proper note, getting a pair of goals from Peter Vukonic and singles by Ed Bachuk and Jack Bir in scoring a 4-1 victory over Olympic Hotel.

With many new additions to the team, such as Chris Bowcock, Shaun Rempel, Drew Denis and Vukonic, all from Overwaitea's soccer club, the 'Spurs are calling this season somewhat of a new beginning and have high hopes for the future.

And for being their first real test together as a team, the Hotspurs did quite well with veteran Jack Bir putting in a whale of a game as a very aggressive sweeper.

In fact, it wasn't until they were up 3-0 in the second half that Squamish got a bit sloppy, thus enabling the Olympics to get on the scoreboard.

This Sunday the 'Spurs will complete a triple header at Centennial Fields, taking on the Coquitlam Rangers.

Squamish Women "Take Back the Night"

A small, wet and determined group of Squamish women took to the streets Friday night in a peaceful demonstration against violence towards women.

Organized by the Howe Sound Women's Centre, "Take Back the Night" is an international night of demonstration that has, since the '70's, allowed women to publicly express their rage at the reality of violence that their sex is subjected to everyday.

Fourteen women carrying placards saying "Women against Rape" and "Women Against Violence Everywhere" proceeded from Overwaitea along Second Avenue towards the hotel area, which is a traditional scene of violence towards women, Eileen Brade, HSWC co-ordinator said.

Finishing off this symbolic stand of women who refuse to take responsibility for sexual harassment, sexual assault, battering and incest, the group reached the Squamish Pavilion for a brief rally and candle-lighting ceremony.

On hand to share her singing and guitar playing with the group was Anna Herman, a performer and member of the Squamish Songwriters' Guild.

In a quiet moment, Brade read a letter from a woman who wrote in outrage about someone she knew who had been raped twice by the same man. In the letter, the writer described the incredible feelings of guilt and responsibility experienced by the rape victim.

Preparing to Take Back the Night in a peaceful demonstration protesting women's subjection to violence and rape, these women face the wind and rain that swept through Squamish last Friday night.

WHAT'S COOKIN'

by Dori Hookham

Winter Treats made easy

It's nice to put away a bit of summer to brighten a "Wet Coast" winter day, and it needn't involve hours over a hot canning kettle. Here are some easy ideas:

*Quarter or halve ripe tomatoes. Freeze them on cookie sheets and then bag them. They're great in soups and sauces. (If frost threatens un-ripe tomatoes, rip up the plants by the roots and hang them upside down inside. The fruit should ripen.)

*Grate zucchini and freeze it in 1-cup batches (Recipe for Zucchini Nut Loaf next week).

*Pit Italian prune plums and freeze on cookie sheets. (Bag once frozen). These are terrific stewed up and served with custard or baked into a deep dish pie.

(Now if only we could bottle up the sun!)

Summer's Excess

Fresh herbs in oil -- good for basil, thyme, whatever you like.

*harvest your herb plants, taking care not to bruise the leaves.

*in a bowl mix together 1 cup of oil and 1 Tbsp. of salt.

*gently stir the herb into the oil, making sure to coat each leaf completely.

*pack into jelly jars making sure that the oil covers the leaves.

*this is good to use when making sauces for pasta.

HSSS teacher samples science at Queen's

Howe Sound Secondary School teacher Herb Johnston crossed the continent in July, looking for a better way to deliver science to Canadian students.

He found part of the answer at Queen's University, where he joined 24 of the country's most experienced science teachers for a unique two-week immersion in environmental issues.

According to Johnston, the program gave teachers a valuable overview of the latest research in areas such as acid rain, animal behavior, water pollution, disease control and population studies.

"I rate it as the best professional development activity I've done in my 20 years of teaching," he said. "I particularly like the interaction with people at the research level."

Queen's established the program three years ago, following a Science Council of Canada report outlining the difficulty of bringing modern science into high schools coping with dated texts and ill-equipped laboratories. Shell Canada, Ltd. joined the effort two years ago, when it granted the university $220,000 for four years of the program.

The university's biology department provided many opportunities for "hands-on" experience. Teachers were able to net fish for study, count plants affected by pollution, observe DNA extracted from blood samples and witness how well some animals see and hear.

These activities inspire an inquisitive approach which Johnston hopes to take back to his students. "When you get excited about a topic, you have a tendency to get the students into discovery mode," he said. "That's very much needed for teachers today."

The group's crowded schedule included lectures, laboratory sessions, field trips and informal evening discussions with guest speakers in science and government. Among the stops were local wilderness preserves, a nuclear facility at nearby Royal Military College, the Metro Toronto Zoo and five days at the Queen's University Biological Station, located about halfway between Kingston and Ottawa.

Seventy-five teachers, representing towns and cities across Canada, have participated in the program so far. Topics change each year, with biotechnology and advanced materials having been offered in the previous two years.

Junior wardens jump into fall olds, is Kathy Babuin. Regular meetings will start on Wednesday, Sept. 28 at Squamish Elementary School, and Babuin has just about all she can handle with the boys who have already signed up.

"But you need a lot of back-up help to do fund-raising and things like that," she said.

Babuin hopes to bring in experts to talk to the children about such things as forestry and first aid. Also high on the list of priorities are several hiking trips.

But besides getting the Junior Forest Wardens outside to see the environment, Babuin said the ultimate purpose of the group reaches a little deeper.

"One of the main things we want to do is to teach the kids to work together and to get along with others."

With its beautiful natural surroundings, it is only natural that Squamish has an active group of Junior Forest Wardens.
