No surprises in council's airport vote

Runway length limitation the only change to proposed official community plan amendment

Ron Enns

Little has changed since Squamish council in March voted against a proposed amendment to the official community plan to allow expansion and development of the airport.

It was no surprise that council last week voted in favor of virtually the same official community plan amendment — the only change in the wording being that the airport runway be limited to its current length of about 800 metres. There was no suspense when it was time to vote: councillors Ron Barr and Don Ross again voted against the plan and Mayor Corinne Lonsdale and Coun. Bill McNeney — who last time voted against the plan saying the runway length could be delineated in the bylaw — now voted in favor of the plan, along with councillors Ted Craddock and Tom Auusgaard.

No one at Municipal Hall was in shock extra seats had been squeezed into the council chamber earlier in the day — when Brackendale residents descended in mass at the April 2 council meeting. The airport issue dominated the agenda and delegation after delegation ensured the meeting, which started at 3 p.m., could not finish until five hours later.

And with another public hearing required — scheduled for May 2 at 7 p.m. at the Legion — it can be counted on that many of the same people will attempt to sway council on the issue, saying the same things as they have until now. Brackendale residents who oppose the plan fear that their quality of life, safety and surrounding environment will be compromised if council allows airport development and expansion to occur. Supporters of the plan laud economic benefits, including jobs, and further development of the tourism and high-tech industries.

Council, prior to voting on the issue last week, attempted to focus on the issue as an amendment to the official community plan only. But the issue kept slipping back to being about a proposal by Seattle-based Pacific Cascade to start regularly scheduled air service using Dash-7 aircraft between Squamish and Seattle. Council is dealing with the expansion and development issue of the airport at this time as a result by the proposal attached to it by Pacific Cascade.

Lonsdale said even though the official community plan amendment deals with airport development and expansion, "period," if it was not for Pacific Cascade on the scene, tax dollars would have to be spent on the plan. (Opponents to airport development and expansion say that taxpayers will still have to pay as part of the Pacific Cascade proposal).

Sea to Sky economic development officer Robert Fine, speaking at last week's council meeting, said he believes the issue should be focused on the official community plan, rather than a specific proposal.

"It's about a direction of movement for the community and whether council deems it important enough to move in that direction."

The official community plan amendments do not deal with Pacific Cascade proposal, but they would allow an airline to enter into an agreement with the district for regular air service into Squamish.

"If I could stop an airport in my back yard, I'd do it too," said Lonsdale, a Garibaldi Highlands resident. "But we have to look at the community at large."

Police horrified by 'vicious' assault

Two 14-year-old Squamish girls have been charged with aggravated assault after police discovered what they call "one of the most vicious assaults that Squamish members have attended involving young girls."

Police were called to an apartment on Wilson Crescent March 28 at about 9 p.m. and found a 14-year-old girl who had been "viciously assaulted," a Squamish RCMP press release says. The victim had been severely beaten with a liquor bottle and repeatedly kicked and punched. One of the assailants had jumped on the victim's head.

The first reaction of attending RCMP members was that the victim was dead. The victim was taken to Squamish General Hospital and the next day taken to Lions Gate Hospital. She had severe trauma to the head, including a fracture of the bone around the eye and bruising.

Police arrested two suspects. One has been held in custody until her trial and other has been released into the custody of her parents until the matter has been dealt with in court. The names of the girls who have been charged cannot be released because of provisions in the Young Offenders Act.

Police say that the beating was a result of an incident regarding the boyfriend of one of the suspects.

As well, police say liquor played a part in the tragedy. However, they are not aware of how the minors received the liquor. Police are actively trying to find out who supplied the liquor. If the supplier is located, that person may be charged with criminal offences relating to the assault. Police request that anyone with information about his case to call the Squamish RCMP detachment at 898-9611 or Crimestoppers at 892-TIPS (8477).

Street-proofing our children unfortunate but necessary

By Mary Billy

It may seem a terrible thing to have to teach young children how to protect themselves against predators, but when a small child standing with his brother while their mother is getting their baby brother out of a carseat is almost successfully abducted, as happened only a couple of weeks ago in North Vancouver, it becomes apparent that drastic action must be taken.

The elder brother in this scenario, only five years old, had recently attended a street-proofing course and shouted to his mother, "Mummy, Shaun is going with a stranger." The mother turned to see her little boy in the hand of a woman, already across the street. In another minute they would have been out of sight over a hill. She ran and retrieved him. She was so relieved to have caught him in time she didn't take much notice of his kidnapper so couldn't give a description to the police, which means, of course, the kidnapper is still out to prey on other children.

The parents' advisory council at Squamish Elementary School had concerns expressed by parents about how their children could protect themselves and become more aware of the dangers present even in small towns like ours. They decided to bring in Street-Proofing For Kids (SPOK) a non-profit society run by Frank Olson and recognized as one of North America's outstanding self-protection programs. He is sponsored by the United Food and Commercial Workers Union of B.C., the Vancouver Canucks and United Way.

Tracey Wellman, a Squamish Elementary School parent advisory committee member was a friend of the Dunahees, who lost their little boy on Vancouver Island, so knows first hand how important it is that kids are made aware of the dangers and given tools to protect themselves. The Squamish Elementary PAC members put on a swap meet and flea market, hot dog sale and raffle and raised close to $1,000, almost the full cost of bringing the program to their school. It is likely the PAC committee will cover the remainder of the cost and recoup it through future fundraising events.

They hope that parents will make sure their children attend this important program and attend themselves, so they can discuss it together later, and reinforce the lessons learned throughout the year. Olson talked about the stereotypical idea we all have of what bad guys look like and how wrong we can be. They can and often do look like well dressed businessmen or kind old grandpas, or their mother's best woman friend, or a nice young guy just trying to help out. But what he did emphasize after working with child predators and molesters within the prison system is that unlike other criminals, who he says for the most part are pretty stupid, child molesters are usually better educated, incredibly intelligent and elusive, cunning and smooth and travel around looking for children to hurt.

He said child molesters and rapists are incurable and go on, even into their 80s and 90s. "There is no cure for sex offenders," he said. "One man sexually molested his own grandson every Saturday when he took him to the movies."

But let's not think that all molesters and child abductors are male: they are not. He emphasized to be especially careful of babysitters and to trust your child by listening to the clues they give. If they have been taught about good touch and bad touch, it becomes easier to check whether bad touch has ever been present. Bad touch is explained as anywhere their bathing suit touches their body and good touch, where it does not. It is also advisable to have a code word for anyone who says they may have been asked to pick your child up at school or anywhere else.

If the person doesn't know the code word then the child will know to take evasive action, which Olson teaches is four giant steps back immediately. This allows time to get away if the person tries to jump out of their car and abduct the child.

He emphasized that no children should be outside alone, especially on schoolyards or playgrounds. And kids need to be taught recall techniques, such as body size, hair color and length, clothing worn, such as a hat or kind and color of jacket or boots, vehicle color, how many doors. The better they can describe anyone who tries to lure them away or who may have molested them is the best help in catching them. Sometimes a profile can be collected by police that begins to show up in different areas, and may eventually lead to an arrest.

Learning this kind of identification can be done as a fun game between parents and children while watching videos at home. Make it a contest to see who can remember the most. They don't need to be told it's so they can identify bad guys, but it will stand them in good stead if they are ever in a bad situation.

Children need to be taught some basic rules to protect themselves, such as that adults do not need to ask questions of children for directions, or for help to find things like money or pets, and that if they ever get that "butterfly feeling," they should trust it and run away immediately and get where there are other people, such as a store, garage or block parent. They can be taught to yell loudly, "No, go ask an adult!"

They also need to be taught how to scream loudly, and to yell that the person is not their mother or father, and to yell, "Help." We teach our kids not to scream, because it is one of the most irritating things, but they also need to be taught there is a right time to scream as loud as they can, and that is when they are in danger.

The Squamish Elementary PAC is purchasing a video which will be available to parents in the school district who may want to know more about this program. For information, call either Tracey Wellman at 896-2380 or Bonnie Golai, at 892-3482. We all need to be on the alert for predators of children, and not to forget they aren't always bad guys from somewhere else, Olson said. Sometimes they're right within the family. Incest and child molestation is at an all-time high.

He said that in seven out of the 10 schools he's presented his program, at least one child has come up and told him of an incident that has happened to them. There's no way to protect every child all the time and we don't want to be so cautious that they aren't allowed to have the fun and joy of playing, which is such a necessary part of childhood. But education is the best protection for all members of the family, especially the little ones.

Survey authors hold open house

In 1995 a survey was sent to all postal addresses within municipal boundaries asking questions to determine the opinions and attitudes of Squamish residents regarding the District of Squamish. Questions involved the issues of housing, transportation, environment, development, economics, recreation, community involvement and the overall quality of life in Squamish. The survey results have been completed and a summary report on its findings is available at Municipal Hall.

On Thursday, April 18 from 7-9 p.m. survey authors Dr. Alison Gill of SFU and Dr. Maureen Reed of UBC will hold an open house at Municipal Hall to provide an overview of the survey results and answer questions. They will make a brief presentation from 7:30-8 p.m. Everyone is invited. For details call community planning director Margaret-Ann Thornton at 815-5002 (planning department direct line).

Pair hit lottery jackpot

A run to the store at 2 a.m. for restaurant owner Frances Deane and her employee Patsy Harris turned into a reason for celebration. The two uncovered $10,000 on a $1 Shamrock Surprise instant lottery ticket.

Once Deane, owner of a restaurant in Brackendale, was convinced they were actually going to share $10,000, the celebration commenced. "We celebrated a little and opened up a bottle of champagne!" said 35-year-old Deane. The lucky ticket was purchased from Barney's PetroCan in Garibaldi Highlands.

Japanese students need homes

After spending considerable time in Japan in recent years, Squamish boxer Wayne Jackson has had continuing contact with Japanese students looking for home stay opportunities in the Squamish area. Jackson is now hoping to set up a directory of Squamish families willing to host Japanese students for stays of one week up to three months.

"I get a lot of people looking to come to this area from Japan, and I have used up all my friends in finding homes for them for a short time," Jackson said. "I would be really interested in hearing from anyone interested in hosting Japanese students in their home for short or long-term stays."

Jackson said there is some compensation available to cover the costs of room and board. Anyone wanting further information is asked to contact Jackson at 898-1644.

Hotel proposal rejected

Craddock denies conflict of interest allegation

By Ron Enns

A conflict of interest allegation has been made after a council decision to not allow a proposed hotel to be built on highway frontage in the industrial park.

The proposal was rejected by council at its April 2 meeting with a 3-3 vote on the first and second readings of an official community plan amendment bylaw that would be required to allow the 120-room hotel and conference centre with restaurant facilities to proceed. As well, the land would have to be rezoned.

One of the councillors who last week voted against the proposed hotel, Coun. Ted Craddock, was singled out after the meeting by hotel proponent Bruce Kehler as being inconsistent and in a conflict of interest in his decision to remain in the chamber to vote on the issue.

Craddock, a real estate agent, voted on the proposal when it was first presented to council last fall. Then in January Craddock removed himself from council matters regarding the proposal, saying he was in a conflict of interest because the potential purchaser of a tourist commercial zoned property, in which he was acting for both the owners and purchasers, were also interested in developing a motel, convention centre and restaurant. He said he would be jeopardizing his position with his clients if he continued in his capacity on council. (The district's lawyer supported Craddock's decision.)

At last week's council meeting, prior to the hotel proposal being dealt with by council, Craddock announced that he no longer in a conflict of interest situation and that the municipal lawyer agreed.

Kehler said Craddock is in conflict related to property that would be deemed as competition to Kehler. Craddock is the real estate agent for the Klahanie, a resort on Hwy. 99 south of downtown Squamish that is up for sale.

Kehler said that he is "quite surprised at this turn of events, that now (Craddock) feels he's no longer in conflict."

Craddock, in an interview Monday, said the conflict that occurred in January has passed.

"In real estate...we all have ups and downs and if things change, then my position changes...that's an indication that things have changed with the Klahanie, whether it be in regards to a new purchaser, an old purchaser and no contract on the table," Craddock said, adding that he did not wish to delve into the specifics out of the situation out of a respect for the privacy of owners and potential purchasers of the property. (As well, Craddock said that the proponents of the proposed hotel for the industrial park have not told him in person or in writing of any concerns with his involvement in the issue. Kehler said that last fall he challenged Craddock on the issue of his involvement.)

Craddock said it would have been easy for him to not be involved in the vote. "I could have backed off and hidden behind it. I wasn't elected to back off on things. Once my position changed, and the lawyer agreed, my feeling is I have to enter back into the discussions and I'm not afraid to do that."

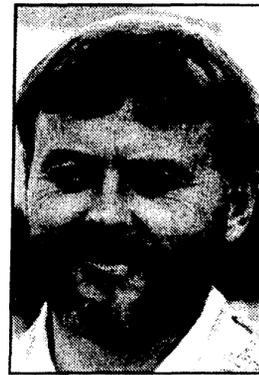

The hotel proposal was first presented to council last November. At that time, the district planning department recommended that council not proceed with the proposal because it did not conform with the official community plan and because the proposal was considered to be too big for the site. Council, however, decided to not deal with the proposal at the time, preferring to wait until the district's economic development committee completed a study regarding uses in the industrial park.

Upon completion of the economic development committee's report, council on Jan. 16 voted in favor of directing the planning department to proceed with bringing forward official community plan amendment and rezoning bylaws to accommodate the proposed development. (At the same meeting, council passed a motion to support one of the options in the economic development committee's report allowing hotel development along Hwy. 99 in the northern Phase 2 section of the industrial park. However, the option did not address what should be developed along the highway in the southern, or Phase 1 area of the industrial park, where the land for the current proposal is located.)

At last week's meeting, the voting of council was split by the philosophy of what the uses of the industrial park should entail. Lonsdale voted in favor of the proposal, along with councillors Tom Bruusgaard and Bill McNeney. Joining Craddock in voting against the proposal were councillors Ron Barr and Don Ross.

Barr and Ross said commercial development — including hotels — should not occur in the industrial park. Barr said commercial development would inflate land values and make the area unaffordable for industry, and Ross said commercial development in the industrial park —

Tale of family terror emerges in manslaughter hearing

Court told that killed father abused his family for decades

By Brent Mudry
Special to The Chief

A brutal baseball bat beating by his mild-mannered son 18 months ago ended the life of a Squamish mill worker, and three decades of horrible family abuse. The tragic and twisted tale of Frederick Charles (Chuck) Elliott's reign of terror over his wife and their three children emerged at the manslaughter trial of his son Ronald James Elliott last week in B.C. Supreme Court.

"This would be a family that lived through unbelievable and despicable hell," said defence lawyer Walter Kosteckyj in summing up at a sentence hearing April 2 in Vancouver. Ronald Elliott, 28, pled guilty to manslaughter March 18 in a plea bargain with Crown prosecutor Gary Hales just before his one-week second degree murder trial was set to begin.

Elliott's mother, older brother and sister, all victims of the tyrannical father, and his mother-in-law and sister-in-law sat directly behind him in court. "All would have testified" against the deceased, Kosteckyj told Justice Donald Clancy, had the trial proceeded without a guilty plea. The defence lawyer also noted that Ronald Elliott's father-in-law, who is a sheriff in Squamish, and a church minister both provided letters of support for the convicted man.

The court was told that Ronald Elliott exploded after a trigger phrase was shouted by his abusive father on the fateful morning of Oct. 14, 1994 at the family's Valleycliffe home. "You're a slut like your mother," Chuck Elliott, then 60, allegedly yelled, not realizing the angry words would be his last.

"At that point Ronald Elliott has no recollection of events until he is splattered by blood...he is in shock after he realized what happened," said Kosteckyj. With little delay, Elliott drove to the Squamish detachment of the RCMP and reported the killing.

Kosteckyj traced out the decades of abuse leading to the final tragedy in the Elliott household. To outsiders and coworkers, Chuck Elliott seemed like a relatively normal guy. To his family, "he was an absolute tyrant," Kosteckyj told Justice Clancy.

In the early years of his marriage, Chuck Elliott, a "horrible drunk," came home from his bouts of heavy drinking to abuse his wife. The cycle was repeated "hundreds of times," Kosteckyj told the court. "Mr. Elliott was a batterer of the worst kind."

When Ronald and his brother ran into the bedroom, their father continued his abuse. The mother was prepared to testify that Chuck Elliott told the kids to get out and that it was all their fault.

When the children grew older, the beatings started on them as well, the court was told. Often in a rage, Chuck Elliott would yell: "We're going to leave that slut, your mother." He would start throwing things around the house and packing the car until his wife pleaded with him to stop and come back into the house.

Kosteckyj told the court that Douglas, the eldest son, would later speak back to his father and confront him but Ronald, the weakest in the family, would just try to be passive and avoid his father during the tirades. After the death, "many people suspected it was Douglas," Kosteckyj said, because Ronald was a totally non-aggressive person.

The recent years were like the calm before the storm. Chuck Elliott cooled down and tempered his abuse, and was even initially agreeable when his wife announced she was leaving him. The family returned to the house to help the parents fix it up and prepare it for sale.

Chuck Elliott's violent mood swings reappeared. After his sons worked all day on the house, he would rip out the wiring and destroy the gyproc at night in a rage.

He told Jacqui, his daughter, that he was "never going to leave the house. The children decided to immediately remove their mother and put her in hiding with them in Vancouver. "She believed she had to leave the country...that her husband would track her down and kill her otherwise," Kosteckyj told the court.

Ronald, tied by economic necessity, was the only one left at the house with his raging father. Douglas was prepared to testify that his father was paranoid, fearing people were out to get him.

and he kept weapons such as sharpened ski poles throughout the house for easy access.

The uneasy co-existence between Ronald and his father came to a sudden and bloody end. Enroute home Ronald stopped off at the 7-Eleven to pick up coffee at 7 a.m. after a night of playing pool with some friends and drinking three or four beers.

At home in his bedroom, he was starting to have a smoke when his father awakened and started yelling at him, asking where he had been. Ronald has no memory of what happened after he picked up an aluminum baseball bat. "He sat in his room, shocked and numb, and immediately went to the police station," Kosteckyj told the court.

"The sentence hearing resumes May 10 in Vancouver. The Crown is seeking a three-year term in a federal penitentiary, while Kosteckyj is asking for a non-custodial sentence, likely using electronic monitoring, given the unusual circumstances of the case. The defence lawyer said that Ronald Elliott never displayed any violent or aggressive behavior before, and the case is akin to spousal abuse.

Court decision delayed pending new road design

decision in a court case in which B.C. was charged with allowing a train to stand at a crossing for more than five minutes is not expected until after the completion of a new road designed to alleviate the rail crossing problem in the North Yards area.

B.C. Rail appeared in Squamish provincial court April 3 for a trial resulting from a Squamish resident registering a complaint that he was stopped by a train for minutes at the North Yards crossing Government Road on Nov. 5, 1995. Ron Wahl said the train was standing at the crossing when he arrived at the crossing at 11:15 p.m. He said that the train alternated between being stationary and moving back and forth between the crossing six times before it cleared the crossing 17 minutes later.

Under the Railway Act, a train is not allowed to stand for more than five minutes at a crossing. A fine not exceeding $10,000 can be levied under the Railway Act if a defendant is found guilty of the charge.

Court was told that the blocking of the crossing occurred as a result of the shunting — removing cars from a train — of seven cars in the North Yards the night of the alleged offence.

Defence lawyer Michael Skene, in his opening statements, said testimony will show that B.C. Rail has been diligent in attempting to avoid this incident and that the District of Squamish did not allow the new road plan to occur in 1995.

Because of the technical nature of the case — there were many references in testimony and submitted charts and drawings of the various distances between switches and crossings on the railway and the times that the train passed the switches — both the defence and Crown will prepare written submissions for Judge C. I. Walker. A decision in the case has been set for Oct. 1.

B.C. Rail in January 1995 was fined $1,000 in Squamish provincial court for allowing a train to stand for more than five minutes at the Midnight Way crossing in the Cheakamus valley.

to 10 minutes. He said he could not tell from train sheet records how long the crossing was blocked. During cross-examination Griffin said he estimated it would have taken the train about 10 to 15 minutes to cross at the North Yards crossing if it did not have to stop. He said the maximum speed for trains on the section of track in question is 15 miles per hour.

B.C. Rail manager of engineering services Doug Carabetta said the railway has been working with the District of Squamish to close Buckley crossing — the next crossing south of the North Yards crossing — and build a new traffic route through the industrial park remaining on the east side of the railway tracks so that vehicles travelling through the area can bypass both the Buckley and North Yards crossings. He said plans were to close Buckley crossing and open the new road in the summer of 1995, and added that more design details required by the District of Squamish delayed the plan. He said he hopes the project will now be done by September. He said he assumes that the shunting area will remain in the same place south of the North Yards crossing, which will remain open for access to the houses on an Indian reserve and the B.C. Rail shops.

He said the railway tries to avoid shunting in an attempt to minimize the delay. He added the workers know about the five-minute clause in the Railway Act regarding impeding traffic. He said he believes the five-minute rule refers to a standing or shunting train, but does not apply to a moving train.

B.C. Rail manager of rail traffic control Ron Griffin testified that the actual process of shunting may take about five

Many candidates should ensure high voter turnout

Squamish voters are facing a byelection May 11 to fill the seat vacated recently by Meg Fellowes. At the close of nominations Thursday, nine candidates had filed the appropriate papers to run. This could be either a blessing or a curse.

On the positive side, the mob of candidates shows a lot of people care about their community and want to be involved in the decision making process. And with so many people running, the voter turnout should be substantial.

In most cases, byelections draw little interest from the voters. Turnout is generally best when the mayor's chair and all council seats are up for grabs. But presuming each of the candidates running in this byelection has a broad circle of friends and relatives who can be convinced to get out and vote, the voting percentage should improve.

On the downside, too many candidates can cause confusion as to who stands for what. And if some candidates have the same ideas and platforms, all they do is dilute the vote. It is conceivable that someone could win a seat on council for the next five months with just 12 per cent of the vote. That would be a travesty.

For general elections there is always an all-candidates' meeting which is broadcast by Community Cable 10 so as many people as possible can find out what each candidate stands for. But it is tougher to generate such interest in a byelection. Perhaps the number of candidates will convince one of the many community groups to host such an event. This would be particularly valuable, because even though the winner's term might be short, there are some extremely important decisions facing council in the next few months. Rest assured the issue of airport development will be front and centre in the campaign. And the people of Brackendale most directly affected will vote in large numbers. We hope the candidates will generate enough interest in the rest of the community to convince people to get out and vote as well.

Recommendations will make wilderness programs better

We took some flak earlier this year when we questioned some aspects of the wilderness program trip from which young Adam Gibson went missing on Anvil Island. That mishap and another in the Okanagan in which several young people suffered frostbite prompted Attorney General Ujjal Dosanjh to order an investigation into all wilderness programs in the province.

That investigation has been completed, and among the recommendations are higher standards, clearer rules and stricter monitoring of the programs, which are run by private companies contracted to the B.C. Corrections Branch, a division of the Attorney General's ministry. Most importantly for those directly involved, the report supports wilderness programs in general as being valuable experiences for most young offenders. Approximately 700 young offenders attend the 11 contracted wilderness experience programs each year. They are one option for the courts in attempting to get young offenders to recognize the value of taking responsibility for their own actions.

We support any programs which can keep young offenders out of jail and help them become a positive contribution to society as a whole. A wider variety of education programs and facilities should be available as further options to the court, because throwing everyone in jail is not the answer. The people who run these wilderness programs are obviously dedicated to their work and the young people they deal with. But we hope they can accept the report's recommendations and make some changes to improve safety. We said then and we repeat now, the loss of even one life in these programs is not acceptable.

SADLY, JEAN CHAREST SEEMED UNABLE TO ACCEPT THAT THE PARTY WAS OVER.

Some news images unacceptable

We all have opinions about various aspects of the media. We rail against news coverage, but we faithfully read it and watch it on television. But it is healthy to frequently question what we are reading and watching, to make sure we aren't just zoned out and accepting everything at face value. Though we may not be able to actually change what we read or see, there are enough options that if we don't like something, we have the choice of getting our news elsewhere.

Two aspects of television coverage really bothered me last week. One was a current news event, in which a baseball umpire died after collapsing on the field just after the start of a game. And the other was reporting on the findings of an inquiry into a riot in a women's prison in Ontario in which an all male riot squad was called in to strip-search and subdue the rioting prisoners.

I sat horrified, as did millions of others, April 1 when I tuned in to the season opener at Riverfront Stadium in Cincinnati. Seven pitches into the game between the home town Reds and the Montreal Expos, home plate umpire John McSherry turned to head for the umpire's dressing room when he collapsed. After a few seconds of sitting confused and stunned, the medical staffs and players from each team rushed to help. It was too late. McSherry died from massive coronary problems.

He had known about the problems for some time. At age 53, 6-foot-2 1/2, and conservatively listed at 328 lb., McSherry had postponed a visit to the doctor to get his heart checked out so he could umpire the opening game. There is now great debate about the comparative fitness of baseball officials compared to those in every other sport. Can you imagine a 300 lb. hockey referee skating up and down the ice for a couple of hours keeping up with the play?

But that's not my point. I quickly turned off the TV, only to be blasted with the same horrific image on the news, several times. They even played McSherry's collapse in slow motion, and faded to commentary as the poor man lay face down in the dirt, rather than choosing to show a clip of the medical staff members trying to help the stricken man. It era caught the images as eight women were strip-searched by the all-male riot squad. I can see the value of broadcasting these images when they were originally released to the media, to show the horror of the actions taken and provide the impetus for the judicial inquiry which was subsequently called.

What I don't understand is why, when the inquiry results were released last week, televi-

As I See It

By Al Price

was shameful exploitation, at best. Even the Vancouver Sun the next day showed an image of McSherry face down in the dirt, like some poor Bosnian war victim, instead of being helped by the baseball people who obviously loved and respected him.

I know in communities such as Squamish, people don't like to see their friends or relatives splashed across the front pages in gory and gratuitous images of injury or death. We try our best not to do that, showing instead accident scenes portraying the RCMP, ambulance attendants or Squamish Fire Rescue personnel trying to help the victims. It reinforces the notion that our emergency crews are quick and competent, and that people in our community really care. And occasionally it provides a valuable lesson from which we can all learn. The television coverage of John McSherry's death showed neither, and unfortunately those are the images by which he will be remembered.

In the case of the incident at the Kingston Prison for Women, which took place in April 1994, a prison video cam-er had to replay each night the original tape of the strip searches. Just because these women were prisoners at the time doesn't mean their bare butts need to be shown to basis viewers on a nightly basis two years after the fact.

While I agree political correctness has gone way too far in many cases, I don't think we can ever go too far in understanding and protecting the dignity of women, regardless of their station in life.

And I'm tired of being told with increasing frequency that the news I am about to watch "may be offensive to some viewers." Some issues which are offensive are necessary to convey the horror of a story or an individual's actions. But I get offended when I sense TV stations are just trying to make sure they have something offensive in each newscast, regardless of whether it is germane to the story.

If the much-vaunted v-chip, which is supposed to be able to delete violence and pornography from television screens, is any good, it will also fade to black for gratuitous death and degradation in the news.

Flotilla an inspiration

Editor,
During spring break I joined 200 other youth from across B.C. as well as representatives from Iowa, Ontario and Manitoba on a five-day expedition through the Gulf Islands. The goal of the Leadership Initiative For Earth (LIFE) is to foster environmental awareness and leadership among youth.

This was accomplished by many interesting workshops, inspiring activities and enlightening speakers such as Jean-Michel Cousteau. We learned about ecology and leadership skills through hands-on activities. It was amazing to talk to other young people who really care and are willing to do something about the problems we face.

For the participants, the flotilla started months ago. In preparation for this voyage each of us chose to participate in a volunteer project for 25 hours and read a book on ecology. I chose to work as an Eagle Watch volunteer interpreter. I found my time spent as a volunteer immensely valuable. Aside from developing communication skills and learning facts about eagles, I also began to think about careers in the environmental areas and I discovered just how satisfying volunteer work really is.

The highlights of the trip were seeing dolphins, which had special meaning for us because our group name was Dolphins, doing a quadrant study in the intertidal zone, and spending time sitting in the sunshine on the boat deck talking to other youths who have similar interests and concerns. Without a doubt the flotilla is an experience which I will remember forever. It has inspired me to do what I can to help keep our town, province, country and world a better place.

When will council listen?

Editor,
I don't get it. At every public meeting on the air - the representation of the public has been overwhelmingly negative and lots of nay speakers and most no yea speakers. Why is it that the mayor and three out of five councillors we pay to do for us are so determined to do to us, the very thing we have clearly and eloquently told them we do not want?

If they aren't listening to us, just who are they listening to? And if not at public meetings, when?

If they aren't listening to the concerns of the citizens, whose concerns they are supposed to be representing, they must be acting on their own personal agendas.

I don't get it. Maybe we should be looking for Swiss bank accounts.

Britannia correspondent corrects an oversight

Editor,
During our last executive meeting of the community association here in Britannia Beach, some issue was taken with my two previous letters to the editor. One of our directors. This director felt one of my remarks were inflammatory and he also made me aware of certain inaccuracies in my writing. Another issue raised was that the point of view I expressed had not been sanctioned by a majority of our executive members and so did not confer upon me the authority to endorse those letters as president of our community association.

Out of respect for all the directors in our association, which embodies the only democratic due process in Britannia, I will refrain from using my title as president in future letters until my opinions can be voted on by a full meeting of our executive directors. My apologies for this oversight. I must also make apology to our ex-fire chief, George McLaren, who was awarded the Medal of Bravery by the province of B.C. and not the Order of Canada as was stated.

As for some of my remarks being inflammatory, well, I and several of my neighbors feel that some of the actions of our property manager have been equally inflammatory and I will continue to try to provide the only public scrutiny of the way our little village is run, whether as president or chief bottle washer.

The days of the company town being run by one person belong in the old west with the age of the dinosaur. The pressures facing that one person are simply too great and sooner or later reactionary judgments and favoritism become the order of the day.

In all fairness to Coopers and Lybrand, I suggested to our director, who wishes to remain anonymous, that we might give them credit here for some of the good things they have done. He reminded me that Morris Neal, the property manager, has taken it upon himself to rid the village of all the old cars which used to clutter up the place. Mr. Neal has also been instrumental in replacing the footbridge across Britannia Creek so folks can once again reach our stores and businesses by using the stairs on the north side of the creek. The property manager has commenced renovation on what used to be Britannia's old ballroom so that we might have a community centre rent free. Volunteers will be needed.

During the current directorship's inaugural meeting of the community association, I mentioned my concern about Coopers and Lybrand commandeering the use of our old tennis court to provide security for their company and personal vehicles. Mr. Neal assured me before all those present that all we had to do was ask if at any time we wanted it back. Can we please have our tennis court back? Our kids have virtually no programs or facilities here and the tennis court was one of the few places where they could rollerblade and where the adults could have an outdoor barbecue on occasion.

I'd like to invite any or all who read my letters to the editor to send any comments or suggestions you might have to P.O. Box #66, Britannia Beach, B.C. V0N 1J0. It would also be great to hear from anyone who has any old stories about Britannia. I'd really like to find out some more about what was at one time the community church.

My thanks to The Squamish Chief for graciously providing this forum for discussion in the hopes that we can help to make Britannia Beach a better place.

Taxpayers' concerns dismissed by mayor

Editor,

After attending our municipal council meeting on Tuesday, I came away feeling very discouraged.

I listened for 3 1/2 hours to some very valid concerns expressed by many excellent speakers. When all was done, our mayor in her wisdom stated it didn't matter what was said because the majority of council was in favor of amending the bylaw regarding the rezoning of the airport lands.

What do we know? We are only taxpayers.

Brackendale residents are going to be the most affected by this rezoning, but in the end every Squamish resident is going to pay. It will cost a small fortune to bring this airport up to certification standards.

Please make your concerns known at the public hearing at the Squamish Legion on May 2. Council is not listening to the taxpayers of this community.

Spending Squamish tax dollars to subsidize an American company bringing tourists to Whistler should not be our number one priority.

Not all teens baccli

Now be honest, what's the first thing you think of when you see a teenager? That there's going to be trouble, or is it that there's going to be some sort of fight?

I'm sure that's what many people think and, coming from a teenager such as myself, it's pretty sad. I've never done drugs, never smoked, never stolen anything and have never done anything illegal (which many adults think every teenager has done), and I'm not alone.

A lot of teenagers are just like me. They enjoy the better things in life and stay away from the different bad things, such as drugs, alcohol, and stealing. I'm not saying all teenagers are perfectly behaved human beings because I know a lot aren't. But I think for the most of us who have our heads on straight, a little more trust and respect should be given.

Personally, I'm tired of walking into a store and right away being mobbed by salespeople thinking I'm going to steal something or rob the place. I'm tired of walking into a restaurant and having to wait a lifetime for service because the waiter thinks I'm just going to sit there and take away his business. It's a joke how bad it can get sometimes. Our money is worth just as much as yours, but a lot of people fail to realize this.

I know a lot of people going to read this and tuck away, saying what does he know? He's just a teenager.

The thing is, though, I know, and so does the average level-headed teenager. I've been there many times, I've dealt with many of the stereotypical attitudes that are being placed upon us every time we walk outside in public. For all the good kids there are, there are a couple of idiots who screw it up for everyone. A couple of losers who make a bad name for everyone.

So next time you see a teenager don't jump to some unfair, irrational conclusion that we're all going to do something stupid or illegal. For the most part teenagers are reasonable and level-headed human beings. So instead of having a judgmental attitude to even the word teenager, keep an open mind. There's a lot of good in everyone.

Students enjoy concrete jungle

Editor,

From Central Park to Bloomingdale's, 30 or so Squamish students experienced a city like no other. New York welcomed us into its concrete jungle of mad cabbies, skyscrapers and modernistic lights. We were bewildered with fright, excitement and anticipation for the week to come.

After a while we got into the swing of things. A don't walk sign meant we can fit in just one more, and bring cash for dinner meant bringing your life savings.

We took a bite of The Big Apple, touring Greenwich Village, SoHo, Harlem, and Queens. Clutching our wallets and closest friends, we ventured into the mass of underground mazes that New Yorkers fondly call the subway.

Filling our tummies with one of a kind New York pretzels and hot dogs, we ate our way through fields of cafes, restaurants, and street vendors.

New York is definitely the theatre centre of the world. We saw our childhood nanny (Mary Poppins) and Ferris Bueller (Mathew Broderick) perform before our eyes.

The shows were phenomenal. They kept us on the edge of our seats. Some of us went to the award-winning musical Miss Saigon, while others went to the off-Broadway play How To Succeed Business Without Really Trying.

To satisfy our curiosity, we visited the Metropolitan Museum of Natural History and The Museum of the American Indian.

Never ending rows of boutiques and department stores decorated the streets.

How could we resist shopping? Our hearts earned cash was burning a hole in our pockets. All in all, we wanted to be a part of it, and we were.

Cats not as benign as they seem

Editor

I would like to respond to Christine Sivyer of Brackendale, who wrote the open letter on dogs versus cats.

To say that one species of animals cause any more or fewer problems than other is ridiculous. Have you ever weeded your garden and grabbed a handful of cat poop? I have, yet I have never had to sidestep in it. How does one have a nice flower bed without covering it? I have not seen cats jogging down the street, but I have seen them on the hood of my freshly painted car, I have most certainly seen cats on my deck in the morning ripping holes in my garbage. When you say it is natural for cats to chase birds at the feeder, is it not natural for dogs to pack up and hunt?

I really have to question when you say you have "seen a pack of dogs running around and chasing people and young children." Have you honestly seen this? You make it sound like it is a daily occurrence. Not every loose dog is a threat to people walking. Not even close.

I must tell you that while never having been chased by an unleashed dog, I had a cat and her kittens which had been abandoned by a family who lived near us who had to move away. They took up residence under my house. The mother was under the stairs one day, her kittens were on my deck in the garbage and I took them by surprise. Let's just say that yes, sport some scars, and got a trip to the hospital for a tetanus shot. It took a long time to livetrapp them, although I never did catch the mother.

I agree there are dogs which bark at night, but what about the horrifying sound that cats make when they make and fight? Living around a substantial number of cats I get that quite often. Don't get me wrong, dogs are nowhere near perfect, but neither are cats. I have had numerous cats, dogs, birds, fish, reptiles, and horses, and I do agree with you people must become more responsible for their pets actions.

It starts with spaying and neutering and ends with proper pet management. Not a bunch of anonymous complaints in the paper.

map reserve. To ensure the safety of the public, the Ministry of Transportation and Highways closed the area of the crags entirely.

However, earlier this spring climbers began using The Art Gallery crags again, even though a sign indicated the area was closed. (The RCMP attended the area escorted climbers away.) A more prominent sign was put up by the Climbers' Access Society of B.C., telling climbers to keep out of the closed area. Squamish resident and rock climber Ron Goldstone last week went a step further and, with the permission of the authors of some of the climbs, removed the hangars from the routes. Hangars are metal pieces permanently bolted into the granite along the route into which climbers clip carabiners and their rope for protection while they climb up the routes.

"The climbers in there a couple of weeks ago showed that a sign doesn't do it. The hangars were removed as a further deterrent — to stop people from going in there," Goldstone said.

The hangars that have been removed from The Art Gallery are being used to replace hangars that have been stolen from routes on the Smoke Bluffs.

As well, the routes at The Art Gallery have been removed from an Internet World Wide Web home page that lists new climbs in Squamish.

The Climbers' Access Society of B.C. has never taken a position on whether there should be climbing at The Art Gallery. Society president Anders Ourom in a March 20 letter to gun club president Jim De La Mare, said he believes the signage now in place and a newsletter to society members informing them of the closure of the area will deter climbers from using the area. However, he said he believes a meeting between the access society and the gun club to discuss the matter would be constructive.

The majority of the climbers spoken to around Squamish agree there should not be climbing in the area because of the proximity of the gun club's ranges. The approximately 20 routes in The Art Gallery area are a relatively small fraction of the couple of thousand rock climbing routes established in and around Squamish, which is known as the premiere rock climbing destination in Canada and one of the best climbing areas in North America.

Smoke Bluffs trail improved by B.C. Hydro

Work to improve B.C. Hydro transmission lines between Loggers Lane and the Smoke Bluffs has resulted in better public access to the Smoke Bluffs.

When the recent hydro department work was completed, the original trail was to be returned to its original condition.

However, since the improvements have been made the Squamish Trails Society, Climbers' Access Society of B.C. and mountain biking community in the Squamish area have all expressed strong interest in leaving the improvements in place to improve trail access in the Smoke Bluffs area, according to a memorandum from Squamish parks and recreation director Bob Kusch to Squamish council received last week.

B.C. Hydro is willing to leave the improvements in place as long as the district is willing to accept responsibility for maintaining the improvements as a trail. Squamish council agreed to allow the parks and recreation department maintain the trail using funds already in its operating budget.

The trail leaves Loggers Lane through District of Squamish land, passes over an area which the district intends to lease from Garibaldi Granite, through a road allowance and onto land owned by the Federation of Mountain Clubs of B.C. (The Federation of Mountain Clubs has recently offered its land to the district in exchange for it being preserved as a park. This matter will be coming to council at the April 19 meeting.)

The trail in question is an integral part of the Squamish trail network. As well, the improved access will enable Smoke Bluffs climbers and hikers to access the area more easily and thus alleviate traffic and parking concerns in the Hospital Hill area.

Bruusgaard says area is commercially oriented which he said should remain industrial — would be detrimental to downtown. Craddock, who is chairman of the economic development committee, said council should adhere to the option it chose as a vision for the industrial park, where hotel development is designated along the highway only in the northern Phase 2 area. "I would also would like to see a hotel in our community. I do not believe (this proposal) is in the right location."

McNeny said he cannot make the distinction between allowing hotel development in one area of the industrial park but not another and Bruusgaard said since he arrived in Squamish nine years ago "essentially everything" that has been developed in the industrial park is commercial oriented. Lonsdale added that more hotel rooms are needed for the growing tourism and film industries in Squamish.

Kehler, after the proposal was rejected by council, said he would have at least wanted council to pass the first two readings of the bylaws required for the proposal to proceed so that the issue could go to the public hearing stage, allowing Squamish residents to tell Squamish council whether or not they approved of the proposal.

After a public hearing, council would still have opportunities at the third and fourth (adoption) readings of the bylaws to reconsider the proposal.

Kehler said the proposal has received overwhelming support from the chamber of commerce, Chieftain Centre merchants and industrial park land owners and businesses. He said it is "a shame that one person holds the right" to prevent the project from receiving a fair hearing.

As for the future, Kehler said he is convinced that Squamish still wants and needs a hotel. "We're not going to give up. If we have to wait for the (May 11 council) byelection to clear, we'll find a way to get back on the agenda as soon as possible."

Railway heritage jewel to make its debut in Squamish May 26

The New York dining car was a regular visitor to Vancouver from Seattle on the late 1940s International Limited, Great Northern Railway's daily train service to Canada.

The term limited was applied to the first class passenger trains from that long past era where feature comforts in train travel were thought in terms of extensions of hotels and amenities second to none.

The railways prided themselves in the excellence of their dining service, the cars being attractively turned out with damask linen table cloths and highly polished silver service, and one waiter for every six patrons, a service ratio only found in the finest hotels.

While the New York was a hand-me-down from the Empire Builder, the Chicago to Seattle train, it was nonetheless the focus of a charming journey on the 200 kilometre route along the waters of Elliott Bay, Chukanut, and White Rock.

The morning train departed from Seattle at 8 a.m. and arrived in Vancouver mid-afternoon. The overnight Portland sleeper was added in Seattle, being an extension of the Southern Pacific's Cascade service from San Francisco. Burlington Northern donated the car to the rail society in 1986, therefore saving her from the scrap line.

The local National Railway Historical Society group has spent the last six years readying the car for its debut, May 26 on the Classic Coast Mountaineer, a steam hauled special over the B.C. Rail trackage from North Vancouver, Squamish, Whistler and Pemberton. The journey is the annual fund raiser of the society. Reservations may be made at 1-800-663-6000.

The Ritz Carlton fashioned interior of the car revisited the golden era of passenger train travel where the journey was the event more so than the destination. The car has been lovingly restored by a dedicated membership of volunteers at the former Woodward's warehouse in New Westminster. The society has enjoyed the good will and donations of many fine local companies, and believes their support was fundamental for the preservation of this car, and many others in the NRHS heritage fleet.

Ten of the restored heritage Roaring '20s coaches are often used by conventions needing themed transportation in the Whistler area. Many travel counsellors recommend chartering the cars for their glorious natural varnished wood interiors and the windows that open at every station.

Leaving Home is where the heart breaks

Play fraught with emotion and anger timely for Squamish

David Donaldson

It's the eve of young Billy Mercer's wedding to his pregnant 16-year-old girlfriend. His family is devoutly Catholic while Cathy's is Protestant, both late of Newfoundland. It's late 1950s Toronto and tension is building. This is the setting for Leaving Home, the latest production from Squamish's Between Shifts Theatre. The play progresses in real time as the two families prepare for the wedding rehearsal and all the hurt and anger that has been building up among them for years brought out. Leaving Home is the first play in a trilogy written by Canadian David French in the early 1970s. Director Kathryn Daniels says the plays are extremely popular in eastern Canada but haven't been seen much in the west since the Vancouver Playhouse production of Leaving Home in 1974. Daniels played Mary Mercer, Billy's mother, while studying theatre at UBC in the 70s and has "always wanted to do it again." "I chose this play because it has meaning for the people of this community," she says. "It says something about family life, family dynamics." The story deals with issues such as teen pregnancy, running away from home and family violence — issues that are as relevant today as they were 20 years ago. Daniels thinks it may not be the type of play Squamish audiences are used to. "It may be one of the heaviest plays that has been shown in Squamish for quite a while," she says. "It's a timely piece for Squamish." Daniels believes local audiences are looking for something with a little more depth than a comedy or mystery. Between Shifts hopes to do more of this style of Canadian play — stories that will move the audience emotionally. Produced by Diane Gamba, Leaving Home features a cast that will be recognizable to most Squamish theatregoers. Jacob Mercer is played by Mark McConchie, the star of the Howe Sound Players' Christmas production of Scrooge. Starring as his wife Mary, former film and video actress Diane Faux makes her Squamish stage debut. Their eldest son Ben is played by Whistlerite Mike Postie, last seen in HSP's New Style For Murder and Dark Brown, and the young groom Billy is Howe Sound Secondary drama student Steve Smeed, who starred as Bob Cratchit in Scrooge.

Cathy (Louise Carrico) makes an emotional revelation as her father Harold (Skai Stevenson) sits helplessly by.

Louise Carrico, another HSSS drama student who played Cratchit's daughter in Scrooge is portraying Billy's bride-to-be, Cathy Jackson. Cathy's mother Mini is played by Daniels and as Mini's husband Harold is Skai Stevenson, the lead in Play It Again Sam.

Rehearsals are getting longer and harder as the opening draws nearer, says Daniels, and the actors are working very hard towards achieving the plays' proper emotional climax.

"It's a different play in that the climax happens on the last page — it builds and builds and builds until there's an explosion."

A story of strong feelings and pent-up anger, the play does have some coarse language but nothing gratuitous.

"It's pretty mild stuff compared to what's on TV and in the movies today."

Since the play is not suitable for children, there is a disclaimer of course large on the posters and in the advertising. This has prompted some stores to refuse to promote or be involved with the production, but tickets can be purchased from Mostly Books, Stylezone, Slalom Photo, Fruit of the Vine and Barb's Beehive at $10 for adults and $7.50 for seniors and students.

Leaving Home will be showing at the new community theatre at Howe Sound Secondary School from April 17-20 and April 24-27.

The banning of Tom and Huck

When I was just a lad, I could often be found tucked away in the corner of a quiet room mired in my book. When I wasn't outside riding my bike or throwing around a football or inside with headphones on, revelling in the latest classical recording I had purchased with my hard-earned lawn-mowing money, I was getting into a good book. My prosaic interest has never left me, although today it more difficult to find quiet time with the responsibilities of a family (and the demands of two large dogs that go haywire without their daily run).

I have gone full circle with my reading, however. Our year-old daughter is constantly running up to us with books like Little Lost Lamb and Goodnight Moon. Next will be her Beatrix Potter collection and Dr. Suess, no doubt. And it won't be long before she is in school and delving into classics like The Adventures of Tom Sawyer and The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn — if they are not banned.

Fortunately, book banning is a subject less heard of in Canada than it is south of the border. Two of my childhood favorites, The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (at number four) and The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (at number 43), both written by Mark Twain (Samuel Clemens), made the list of the 50 books that were most frequently challenged in schools and public libraries in the United States between 1990 and 1992. Part of the list, taken from the table of contents of Banned in the U.S.A. by Herbert N. Foerstel, was reprinted with permission from the publisher in the minutes of a recent Squamish Public Library board meeting.

The list includes other books that I am quite fond of — like The Catcher in the Rye by J. D. Salinger (number three) — and books that I studied in high school and university, including The Grapes of Wrath by John Steinbeck (number 34).

Other well know titles in the list include Lord of the Flies by William Golding (number 26), Little Red Riding Hood by Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm (number 23, and note that Grimms Fairy Tales is on Stephen King's list of top five scariest books) and The Color Purple by Alice Walker (number 29). Number one on the list is Impressions edited by Jack Booth et al., which is followed by Of Mice and Men by John Steinbeck.

Although these books have been challenged — and some undoubtedly subsequently banned — more than any others in the United States, readers in Squamish can find 29 of the 44 books that are listed in the library board's reprint of the list on the shelves of the Squamish Public Library. (It should be noted that while the library does not have context, at which point they are justifiably upsetting. Put them back in the context of the entire work, however, and they suddenly become sensible.

"Tom and Huck, when taken out of place and out of time, are negative images," Hackett said. "You have to be willing to take it in its place and in its time."

Some interesting situations have arisen at the Squamish library where patrons have come into the

Surroundings

By Ron Enns

in its collection the remaining 15 books on the list, neither have they been banned from the library.)

Muff Hackett, chair of the Squamish Public Library board, says the philosophy of the Squamish library is indicative of the general philosophy about book banning in Canada: people have the freedom to read what they want and access to material they desire. That philosophy is quite different from the general attitude in the United States, where a strong fundamentalist demography, especially in the deep south, may account for many of the allegedly contentious books appearing on the list.

Hackett said there may be less opposition to the books on the list in Canada because we have a less radical society than the United States and because Canadians on the whole read more than Americans. As well, with the population of the United States being 10 times greater than Canada's population there is more opposition available in the United States to gather behind a cause.

However, the question still remains: Why would books such as The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn be so frequently challenged? Swear words in the text and subject matter offensive to some people certainly account for many of the challenges. But, in many cases, words and ideas are taken out of library requesting books with which the librarians are less than comfortable. For example, if someone has an obviously racist disdain for North American Indians and constantly requesting books with an anti-land claims position, the librarian will also suggest other books to be read at the same time so that not just one bias is presented to the reader.

The attitude exhibited by librarians at the Squamish Public Library is refreshing in these days of political correctness, where some people would see book banning as the alternative. And it shows our community is broad-minded enough to be willing to accommodate all points of view. My hope is that as our daughter grows up, she will some day be subjected to a watershed selection of reading material. Books must be understood in their historical context. Students of literature — and of all subjects — must learn to critique and think for themselves, rather than have it dictated to them what they should or should not read. As long as the entire spectrum of views is available, our children will learn to form their own opinions and make the right choices. As for me, it's been a few years since I read The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn and I believe it will soon be time again to in my mind float down the mighty Mississippi.

Warm weather brings out slumbering bears

By Loreth Beswetherick

As the mercury in the valley climbs, the warmer spring weather has aroused resident bears from winter slumber. There have already been numerous sightings in the Whistler area and conservation officers have already received a few complaints.

The bear season has begun. Whistler has always had a healthy black bear population. Over the years, bears have come face to face with a growing human population and the accompanying urban environment. The transition hasn't been easy. The clashes have resulted in bears being shot, emotional outrage and what has come to be termed "Whistler's bear problem."

But the community has taken some measures over the last few years that are starting to pay off, and if Mother Nature plays her part, this year should not be a bad bear year.

Although there will be less money and less manpower for conservation officers serving the Sea to Sky area this year, conservation officer Dan LeGrandeur says Whistler should not be facing much of a problem this year.

Education, awareness, an electric fence around the local landfill and a switch to seeing the issue as a "people problem" rather than a "bear problem" is bearing fruit. That, plus an anticipated average year in terms of bear numbers combined with a healthy supply of berries could rate 1996 one of the better years in the valley's books.

One of their major tasks of the Jennifer Jones Whistler Bear Foundation — an organization dedicated to protecting the lives and well-being of bears within the valley — has been teaching people how to handle their garbage in a bear-proof fashion. Traditionally problem bears are garbage-habituated, bears that have learned to look toward a human source for their food. And once they learn, they never forget.

The community has been going through a learning period, says LeGrandeur. "Whistler has made vast improvements in the last two or three years as far as educating the public and cleaning up the garbage dump and putting the electric fence up. It's a growing process and it's getting much better, compared to what it was like when I first came to Squamish three years ago."

This should result in fewer garbage-habituated bears coming out of hibernation each year.

LeGrandeur says most of the bears that proved a problem in the latter part of the summer and early fall were very large male bears that had been living at the dump most of the lives. "When the electric fence went up they were not able to feed any more, so they went into town."

"We put a fair number of them out last year, but there were some who weren't able to trap or handle so they will be the odd one around again, but certainly nothing like last year."

HOROSCOPE

By C.C. Clark - eTVData Features Syndicate

April 7 through April 13, 1996

Aries (March 21 - April 20)

You have so many decisions to make but so little time. Trust your instincts when necessary. There is a surprise gift on the way.

Taurus (April 21 - May 20)

This is not an easy time, but you have a lot of loving support to back you up. Take advantage of friend's invitation for dinner and a show.

Gemini (May 21 - June 20)

You have mixed emotions about several areas of your life. Don't try to sort through everything at once. Take it one step at a time.

Cancer (June 21 - July 20)

A letter or call from a loved one may not bring the news you expected. Your sarcastic sense of humor may be hurting someone close.

Leo (July 21 - Aug. 21)

Financial troubles may sneak up on you, but you can handle whatever comes your way. Seek the advice of an expert if necessary.

Virgo (Aug. 22 - Sept. 22)

A misunderstanding could quickly get out of hand if you are not careful. Take the time to communicate in a rational manner.

Libra (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22)

It seems you either do everything right or all wrong. There is no middle ground. This trouble some time will pass soon.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 22)

You may not agree with someone's actions of late but you do understand the reasons behind these actions. Be patient.

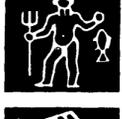

Sagittarius (Nov. 23 - Dec. 20)

Problems at home cannot be resolved overnight. Try to find a different way to handle this difficult situation.

Capricorn (Dec. 21 - Jan. 19)

Money may be a sore point with family members. You may have to agree to disagree and move on. Harboring resentment can cause health problems.

Aquarius (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18)

You may begin to feel restless with your current circumstances. Instead of making major life changes, consider taking a fun class.

Pisces (Feb. 19 - March 20)

There will be some touchy moments at the office and at home. It may seem for a short time as if everyone is in a bad mood.

Unlike people, bees can see ultraviolet light. Many flowers use intricate ultraviolet markings, not visible to the human eye, to attract bees.

Darts & Daffodils

Want to say thanks and make sure everyone knows why? Or maybe offer a little constructive criticism without confrontation? Send your Dart or Daffodil to The Editor, The Squamish Chief, Box 3500, Squamish, B.C. V0N 3G0 or drop it off at our office at 3800 Second Avenue, between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. A hockey arena full of daffodils to Paul Savage at Mickey D's for making a young hockey player's future look brighter. Linda and Roy.

Darts to guys who leave their vicious rottweilers in the back of their pickup trucks while parked in town. One of these days there is going to be one or more people lying dead of a heart attack beside your vehicle when your dog jumps, teeth gnashing, growling and snapping to the full length of its tether. When you've parked right next to the sidewalk your snarling animal is only inches from a pedestrian's face. Someone is going to be badly hurt one of these days. Why don't you do both the people who have a right to walk unhindered and unafraid in town as well as your dogs a favor and leave them at home?

A honeymoon suite full of daffodils to Squamish Jewellers for making my fantasy dream date a reality. Special thanks also to Clarion Hotel Villa and the Hart House restaurant in Burnaby for their wonderful services. S. J.

A go-green service station full of daffodils to Teri and Wayne for their kind donation of fruit juices, a dentist's office full of daffodils to doctors Vanzella and Goldberg for their generous donation of toothpaste and toothbrushes, and a soup kettle full of daffodils to Charlie Schilberg and his disbanded motorcycle club for their generous donation of monies.

Thank you all for thinking of us, from the Squamish

Soup Kitchen.

April daffodils to the wonderful parents of M. Doherty's Grade 3 class for helping pull off the April Fool's joke of the year. Special thanks to the organizing parents. We'll have to think hard to top this one.

Early Sunday morning daffodils to Mr. Vanzella, Wudrick and Mr. Anderson for the time and effort into coaching tyke hockey. Your patience, positive humor and never ending support were very much appreciated. Thank you.

A spittoon full of darts to those who think the whippersnappers at the pool are for depositing specimens. Do you know that water is recycled back into the pool? Yuck.

Dump trucks full of big, heavy daffodils to Ron Hunter for the free fill to the Eagle Grove seniors housing project. Business people putting back into their community has for many years made Squamish a town to be proud of. Thanks again. The red realtor.

A Cavalier full of daffodils to the young ladies who kindly gave me a ride when the taxi failed to show up at the bus depot Friday evening. Many thanks.

A truck full of daffodils to Shirley and Harold Halvorson for giving us a hand driving Shane to school after his accident.

Preschool benefits from ski challenge

The Whistler Public Library and the Sea to Sky Community Services Society's Happy Times special needs preschool in Squamish are sharing directly in the proceeds of the 1996 Felix Belczyk RMCC Ski Challenge on Blackcomb Mountain.

Just before 88 teams of challenge participants headed for the mountain Wednesday, April 3, Ron Marcoux, president and CEO, McDonald's Western Canada, presented two cheques from Ronald McDonald Children's Charities of Canada. One, for $10,000 went to the Whistler Library Fund to help acquire technology to make the library resources accessible to special needs children from the Pemberton, Mount Currie and Whistler areas. The other, for $9,500, went to the Sea to Sky Community Services Society for purchase of outdoor play equipment for use in gross motor development of the youngsters attending the Happy Times preschool.

Kids are the real beneficiaries of the RMCC Ski Challenge, where four-member teams join World Cup and Olympic champions Felix Belczyk, Todd Brooker, Lucie LaRoche and Karen Percy Lowe raise funds for local children's charities and for Ronald McDonald Children's Charities of Canada.

The seventh annual Blackcomb event raised in the order of $100,000 for RMCC, which provides support for community organizations which help improve the quality of life for children and families of children with life-threatening or chronic illness or special needs.

Since 1986, the ski challenges have raised more than $2.9 million for RMCC and this year's results will push that to some $3.3 million.

Chamber attempts to refocus annual Pitch In campaign

It is spring cleanup time and you can lend a hand. In the past during Pitch In Week, large disposal bins were placed in neighborhoods and in the downtown and Highlands business areas in the hopes that residents would use this as an opportunity to clean up their neighborhoods. Unfortunately over the years, this service has been used to clean out garages and basements, while the garbage throughout the neighborhoods has been left, with the exception of the school yards and estuary which are cleaned up by students, estuary society members and Junior Forest Wardens.

Chamber News

In an attempt to refocus the intent of the Pitch In Week campaign from one of cleaning our properties to one of cleaning our community, the chamber of commerce in partnership with the District of Squamish will be hosting a Community Pride Day May 4. Local clubs, teams, associations, businesses and families are invited to participate and to clean up our community. Starting at 11 a.m., garbage bags and routes designated for cleanup will be distributed at the chamber office. The district will supply a large disposal bin and an attendant next to the recycling bins on Second Avenue for the day.

Participants will be asked to separate garbage that can be recycled from non-recyclable garbage.

Following the cleanup, a community picnic and concert is planned from 3-5 p.m. Local talent will be invited to provide an entertainment program in the Squamish Pavilion.

During Pitch In Week, schools can still arrange to have a large disposal bin placed at their school and a supply of garbage bags provided for their use in cleaning up the school yards, calling the chamber at 892-9900. As well, performers wishing to participate in the entertainment program are encouraged to call. A sound system will be provided. There will be lots of fun for everyone. Reduce, reuse, recycle.

Please note that there will be disposal bins placed in the neighborhoods this year, not tipping fees will be waived at the sanitary landfill.

they went to the wet lab to make a fishprint in the Japanese style. They did not get to bed until 1 a.m. (quite an event in itself), and their sleeping accommodation around the tanks which housed beluga whales, so the warning about sound slumber was justified. As soon as it was light enough to see the big shapes moving through the water, the children were also stirring. After breakfast they were given some further instruction about marine mammals before going off to explore the Amazon gallery.

Back at school, the youngsters were unanimous in their praise for all they had seen and done. Ms. Drinovz felt their glimpses of the killer whales outside had marked the high point, but Danielle, Morgan and Courtney thought that making the design of a fish on the pillowcases had a slight edge even on that. Robyn thought the best part was being able to write with the "pen" taken from a squid. Definitely a day and a night to remember!

Why Does it Float?

Ms. McCutcheon's Grade 1 class at GHE has been looking at water from a rather different point of view. Nothing beats messing about with water, and being able to call it doing experiments is a real bonus.

There were four big basins of water on the tables in the middle of the classroom and the students had several plastic containers which they were trying to push under the surface. The containers would just bob up again, but if they reversed them there was a kind of suction as they tried to pull them out of the water again. The reasons for all this came in for a lot of discussion. It was agreed that air must exert a lot of pressure, and they watched the way a plastic pop bottle lost its rigidity once the air had been removed from it so it could be squashed almost flat. The real puzzle, though, was why some big, heavy object, such as an empty tin can, will float, while a smaller thing — a pair of scissors or a really tiny toy soldier — will sink instantly. It was decided that buoyancy has something to do with the air inside the object, and it is also important to note whether it is made of metal, wood or plastic.

Once that was settled to everybody's satisfaction (and everything within reach got dunked, in the interests of science, and its material duly identified), Ms. McCutcheon next had a wonderful puzzle to teach the youngsters about the points of the compass. The puzzle is a map and it shows a ghost town in the old west. There are many signs which indicate how far it has decayed since the glamorous days when it was a boom town: flowers grow between the railroad ties, cobwebs drape the town pump, the Dry Belch saloon is boarded up, all the prisoners have climbed out by the ladder which pokes through the roof of the jail, and a bat flies out of the derelict gold mine. However, some enterprising bank robbers have hidden their loot in this desolate spot and the gold can be found only by following directions. This is a map that really challenges students to find their way around and to make use of a compass.

Easter leftovers don't have to be boring

Someone once defined eternity as a ham and two people. While that definition probably dates from the days when a ham was a small mountain of meat, two people can eat only so much before it's tiresome. If your Easter dinner was a large ham, you may still be looking at ham leftovers. Fear not. There's no end of recipes for diced up cooked ham. And if you really can't stomach any more, freeze small ham cubes in chicken stock ready for the following recipe. Out of sight, out of mind.

The following ham, cheese and broccoli soup makes a fine filling meal with biscuits, cornbread or whole wheat buns. One word of caution — this soup does not reheat very well. The cheese separates and the soup thins out. Worse yet, it curdles if brought to a boil. Watchfulness is the price you pay for homemade and not canned. It's worth it. Make the soup up to the point just before the cheese is added. When ready to serve, stir the cheese into the hot soup. Then dish up.

Cheddar Broccoli Soup with Ham

- 2 cups chicken stock
- 1 1/2 cups cooked ham, diced
- 1 finely sliced green onion
- 3 cups broccoli, cut into tiny, spoon-sized pieces
- 1/4 cup butter
- 3 Tbsp. flour
- 2 cups milk
- 1/2 tsp. Dijon mustard
- 2 cups grated sharp Cheddar cheese
- salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste

Bring the chicken stock to a simmer. Add the ham and cook for 15 minutes to get the flavor of the ham into the stock. Add the green onion and broccoli. Simmer, covered, until the broccoli is just tender, about 5 minutes.

While the ham is simmering, melt the butter in another saucepan. Stir in the flour and cook over low heat for a few minutes. Whisk in the milk. Cook over medium heat until thickened. Whisk in the mustard. (Or to reduce fat, omit the butter and shake the flour and milk together in a tightly lidded container, as for making gravy. Heat until thickened.)

When the broccoli is cooked, pour the chicken stock, ham and vegetables into the milk mixture. Stir to blend. Bring to a boil. Remove from heat and stir in the cheese. Adjust seasonings to taste. Serve at once. If necessary reheat only on low heat. Makes 4 to 6 servings. If you didn't have ham for Easter dinner, there's a good chance you had roast turkey. And still have roast turkey. Turkey-lurky we used to call it once we tired of endless turkey sandwiches. Or when the gravy ran out before the meat.

Leftover turkey has as much potential as ham for disguising as a whole new meal. The following torte is just as good with leftover chicken or cooked chicken breasts.

Tex-Mex Turkey Torte

- 2 Tbsp. oil
- 1 large onion, thinly sliced
- 1 large green pepper, sliced
- 1 clove garlic, pressed
- 1 tsp. chili powder
- 1 can refried beans
- 1 can enchilada sauce (you'll only need about 1/2 the can)
- 1/4 cup chopped canned green chilies
- 2 cups grated Jack or Cheddar cheese
- about 2 cups cooked turkey or chicken, diced
- 6 large soft flour tortillas

Heat oven to 375 degrees. Heat the oil in a large skillet. Fry the onions, peppers and garlic until soft and lightly browned. Season with salt, pepper and chili powder. Warm the refries in a pan so they will spread easily. Spread a thin layer of enchilada sauce in the bottom of a deep pie plate or a springform pan. Cover with 2 tortillas, overlapping slightly to cover the bottom. Spread one third of the refries evenly over top. Sprinkle with one third of the cheese and green chilies. Cover with another tortilla and gently press down. Spread a layer of enchilada sauce over top, cover with one half of the onion mixture. Sprinkle with half the turkey. Cover with a tortilla and press down gently. Spread with refries, cheese and green chilies. Cover with a tortilla. Spread with enchilada sauce, remaining onion mixture and turkey. Cover with the last tortilla. Spread the remaining refries over top. Sprinkle with remaining cheese and green chilies. Cover with foil (don't touch the cheese) and bake for about 40 minutes. Uncover and bake another 10 minutes. Let stand a few minutes before cutting into wedges and serving. Serve with sour cream, chopped green onions and tomato, and salsa.

Tulip tour was beautiful

Branch #70 News

at a wonderful day we spent at dinner last week. We saw rows and rows of tulips in every shape, size and color. Just beautiful. We had a few minutes to stroll through some of the local shops, but unfortunately we couldn't indulge in much shopping. Only a day pass. At the Rock we had supper at the Boat House. Our waiters and waitresses were great, both efficient and pleasant. Many of us had fish and chips while the rest of us stir-fry on a bed of noodles. Excellent food. A big thank you to the Ramsey for organizing another successful trip.

Measles immunization starting

The provincial government's second-dose measles immunization program begins this week at schools and clinics throughout British Columbia. Providing B.C. children with a second dose of the measles-rubella vaccine is an important part of our government's commitment to ensuring the health and safety of all British Columbians," said Health Minister Andrew Petter. Measles immunization clinics will be held across the province until the end of the school year. The immunization program, which was announced in January, is aimed at providing all children from 19 months of age to the end of Grade 12 with a second dose of the measles-rubella vaccine. "We now know it takes two doses of the vaccine to protect children from measles," said Petter. "These special one-time only clinics will provide most children with the protection they need." While 95 per cent of children in B.C. receive a measles immunization at the time of their first birthday, the vaccine only protects about 90 per cent of these children. Experience in other jurisdictions has found that a second dose of measles vaccine helps to protect almost 100 per cent of children. "Measles is a childhood disease that is easily spread by coughing or sneezing," said provincial epidemiologist, Dr. Alison Bell. "While its effects are usually mild, measles can cause ear infections, pneumonia and, in rare cases, death." The last measles outbreak in B.C. occurred in 1986 when a total of 7,148 cases were reported. Without a second-dose measles immunization program, a measles outbreak could occur in B.C. as early as this year or next.

Puzzle solved

SAR

Ms. Miller's Grad 5/6 class at Garibaldi Highland Elementary had a puzzle of their own to solve. The school library is not yet completed and Ms. Miller told the class that 2,267 kilograms of shelving had arrived there. It is marked clearly SAR, and she asked if any one could guess what that means. It seemed obvious to some that, since it is in the library, it must stand for sit and read. Several of the boys thought that search and rescue had to be the answer, although they were not clear what might be in danger amongst the books. Lisa and Danielle won the prize for their correct answer — some assembly required.

Business Management

It is called The Pit Stop and it is located just at the corner of the atrium in Howe Sound Secondary School. The location is ideal for business purposes, customers have to pass by it on their way to and from the office, the cafeteria and the classrooms. The store in-trade covers everything from school supplies for hard working students to candy bars for those who need a little encouragement.

What is special about this school store is that it is, as far as possible, student owned and operated and provides the practical experience necessary for Ms. Campbell's business management class. The students tackled this project exactly as if they were undertaking a commercial venture in the outside world. They drew up detailed business plans, did some market research, took out a loan, and invested in some shares.

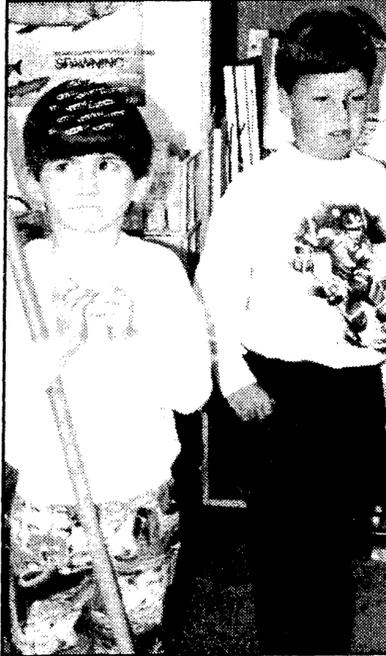

They are personally involved in the success of the enterprise and contribute their time to working behind the counter and their ideas to making the store more effective. It is a hands-on situation which is making them more familiar with the day to day operation of a business, the necessary bookkeeping, the problems and the responsibilities it entails, than any number of text books full of theory could do.

The Wizard of Oz

Ms. McCallum and Ms. Milne recently took their Grade 3 classes from Brackendale Elementary School into the Centennial Theatre in North Vancouver to see a production of The Wizard of Oz. The students loved it, although they were quick to point out details in which the stage show differed from the movie.

Ms. McCallum felt the youngsters were getting the best of both worlds, though. They saw a live, professional performance, with all the trappings of lights, costumes and stage sets, yet it lasted only 90 minutes which is long enough for young people to sit still.

Crazy For You Red letter days next month are May 14-17 and May 22-24, when Crazy For You will be staged at Howe Sound Secondary School.

On April 3, the cast and chorus provided an evening of musical entertainment in the school's multi-purpose room in a dynamic fund-raising effort. They were ably supported by other groups from the Howe Sound music and drama departments, and a delicious spaghetti dinner was cooked and served by staff and students of the school's home economics department.

It was fun, and a great social occasion. It also whetted everybody's appetite for the big event in May.

Allow plenty of time to drive.

Not everyone who drives through B.C. does so solely to golf. Many point their cars to Whistler to feast their eyes on ancient, soaring mountains and dazzling sapphire lakes. And then they golf. Others, preferring shores pounded by the waves and lapped by the tides, drive to the coast, the Island or Vancouver (where, naturally, they golf). And others head to the Interior where the hills roll into hills, hills and more hills upon which are built courses, courses and more courses. Sound like your kind of trip? Call our 1 800 number. Safety fast

One of the best ways to avoid accidents on the road is to learn how to handle your vehicle in every situation. Through clinics like the slalom school held Saturday, the Squamish-Whistler Car Club can teach drivers to learn the limitations of their cars in a variety of conditions.

In practice runs on a slalom course set up by SWCC instructors in a vacant lot provided by Brian McIntosh of Mountain Building Centres, drivers tested their vehicles' handling in slow to medium cornering and lane change simulations, and emergency braking. Drilled in both wet and dry conditions, drivers learned manoeuvres that can translate directly into everyday driving conditions, from accident avoidance to simple, safe lane changes.

"We stress responsible driving on and off the course," says Leigh Schoenberger of the SWCC. "We do not condone speeding or tire burnouts on the street."

Many members of the club are involved in competitions such as the Solo II Championship at the PNE May 26. The Solo II is one of eight regional events in which club members can acquire points to earn prizes. As a non-profit organization, the SWCC donates any money it makes to charities and helped raise $5,000 for the Variety Club last year by participating in the BCMA Variety Club Novice Series.

The SWCC is getting ready for this summer's Thunder in the Streets and is looking for volunteers to help with race-related duties. For information phone Leigh Schoenberger at 892-9877.

Peewee C offence tough to beat in tournament

After an undefeated run in the playoffs, the PetroCan Howe Sound peewee C Mad Dogs continued their success in the New Westminster peewee hockey tournament in March.

After a series of victories, Howe Sound came up against Chilliwack for the final game. The teams were well-matched and finished three periods of play tied at 2-2. The game went into sudden-death overtime with Chilliwack scoring the winning goal with 2:28 to go.

Chilliwack may have scored the winning goal, but Howe Sound outshot them 30-21 and had a tournament total of 148 shots for and 99 against.

The best proof of Howe Sound's offensive prowess came when the goalies of four of the six teams played in the tournament received MVP awards.

The Squamish Skating Club brought home medals from the North Shore International Competition held March 28-31. More than 500 skaters from as far as Whitehorse, N.W.T., Seattle, Wash. competed in the event, with skaters from Squamish finishing in the top 10 in their classes.

Aim for great prizes at Squamish dart shoot

The 18th annual Squamish Dart Shoot will be held at the Royal Canadian Legion Branch 277 in Squamish April 26-28, and more than 300 players are expected to come from all over the Lower Mainland for the event.

Hosted by the Legion in conjunction with sponsorship from Guinness and the Chieftain Hotel, the event will feature mixed doubles, men's and ladies' doubles, men's and ladies' singles and mixed four-person teams.

Action gets under way April 26 at 8 p.m. in the mixed doubles, with a 501 flying start and double finish. On Saturday, April 27, men's and ladies' doubles start at 10 a.m. also with a 501 flying start and double finish. At 2:30 p.m. the men's and ladies' singles kick off with a 401 flying start and double finish, and on April 28 the mixed four-person teams of two men and two women line up at 11 a.m. for a 701 flying start and double finish. Doors open one hour prior to play.

"This is an open event, not just for Legion members," says organizer Clint Levett. "All entrants' fees will be given out as prizes, and there will be some really great prizes. The merchants in Squamish have been really supportive this year."

For more information phone the Royal Canadian Legion at 898-3233 or Todd Arsenault at 892-9158.

The Squamish Rock Boxing Club has been approved as host of the B.C. Golden Gloves Championships in Squamish May 18-19. This event will bring in top level boxers from all over the province and Pacific Northwest.

To stage such and even successfully, many volunteers are needed for a variety of tasks.

The club will be holding a meeting April 10 at 7 p.m. at the Brackendale Art Gallery, and anyone who can help in any capacity is invited to attend.

In addition to two-time B.C. Golden Gloves winner Wayne Jackson, Squamish is the current home base of 17-year-old B.C. Golden Gloves fly-weight champion Tsukasa Asano of Japan. In addition to her provincial title, last year Asano also won the 1995 Canadian National Female Boxing Championships and earlier this year won the Atlanta Golden Gloves title.

The Squamish Rock Boxing Club is also hoping to stage a new event during Squamish Days Loggers Sports this year.

Anyone interested in helping the club is asked to contact Wayne Jackson at 898-1644.

I Wanabee A Cowboy

A Wanabee gets a bucking bronco ride from the Hasbeens goaltender in the Hasbeens vs. Wanabees Game II Sunday at Centennial Field. The Hasbeens are the coaches and parents from the Howe Sound Youth Soccer Association and the Wanabees are selected players from the senior boys teams. It's a fun game organized to give the boys some exposure to a higher standard of soccer. The old guys edged out the younger players 5-3.

ATTENTION DOG OWNERS

All dog owners are reminded that their dogs must have a dog licence. Animal Control Staff have begun issuing $50 Municipal Tickets to dog owners who have failed to obtain a valid dog licence for their dog ($100 if they own 2 dogs). Any dog over 8 weeks old (even small "indoor" dogs) require a licence; if it's a dog, it needs a licence! Licences are available at the Municipal Hall and at the Dog Pound on Government Road.
