Squamish Granite Bringing Back Climbers For The Start Of A New Season

Hints of summer with scattered sunny days in the last two weeks have started bringing climbers back to Squamish for the start of the season. In the photo above, Ian Mason, 23, of Peachland, B.C., scampers up Catch Me Quicker on the Burgers and Fries crag on the Smoke Bluffs. Mason made the trip to Squamish, he said, because there is "great climbing here, different rock from Peachland." Mason said he has been having access problems. Throughout the summer people come from all over the world to climb in the Squamish area, providing a major boost to the local economy. David Donaldson photo

Search crews rescue three stranded skiers

After spending six days last week stranded on the vast glacier system of the Garibaldi Neve, three Whistler backcountry skiers were found in good condition by search and rescue members.

What turned into a massive search effort was initiated Wednesday afternoon with a hasty helicopter search — hampered by poor visibility — after the three skiers were overdue from a planned crossing of the neve. On Thursday morning search and rescue teams began searching the neve on skis from both the Diamond Head end on the south and the Garibaldi Lake end on the north. Late Friday afternoon Jun Yanagisawa, 35, a guide with Tyax Helisports, Hideo Noguchi, also 35, and Takako Kato, 31, were found after spending six days in severe storm and white-out conditions.

The trio was spotted about one kilometre east of The Arkfin — located about two-thirds of the way across the vast, permanent icefield — at about 4:30 p.m. Pemberton Helicopters airlifted them off the mountain a couple of hours later, when weather conditions permitted. All three skiers were examined by a paramedic and did not require medical aid.

While the hikers were flown to the Squamish airport, severe storm conditions closed in again, forcing search crews to remain on the mountain until the following morning.

"It would have been dangerous to transport them in the conditions," said Jim Lang of Squamish Search and Rescue.

The three skiers Saturday (April 20) afternoon travelled from the Diamond Head parking lot to the Elfin Lakes area and on Sunday began the traverse of the neve. When the trio failed to return as planned on Tuesday, police and search and rescue crews were notified. In total, about 45 search and rescue members from teams from Squamish, Lions Bay, Whistler, the North Shore and Coquitlam took part in the search.

Blizzard and white-out conditions hampered initial search efforts. But during a break in the weather Friday afternoon, a Whistler searcher was able to spot the group.

"We were fortunate yesterday (Friday)," said Brad Sills, a Whistler Search and Rescue member involved in the search.

"We had been supplying a big advanced camp up in the high alpine and one of our members had gone up to do an avalanche evaluation," Sills said.

"The clouds just lifted for a brief moment and he spotted the skiers about two kilometres away on an opposing mountain and we were able to find them from

Lyme disease patient will travel to New Jersey for appointment

14-year-old girl gets the run-around from B.C. specialists

By Ron Enns

The mother of a Squamish girl who has been unable to obtain medical treatment in British Columbia for Lyme disease is taking her daughter to a specialist in New Jersey.

Lida Carter said she has continually received the run-around by various B.C. doctors who have examined her 14-year-old daughter Suzy. She said B.C. specialists have not diagnosed Suzy with Lyme disease, but neither have they been able to say what is the matter with Suzy.

Lyme disease is caused by bacteria carried by ticks. An early symptom is a bull's-eye rash followed by flu-like symptoms, including fever, malaise, backaches and headaches. Late stage symptoms include neurologic, arthritic, ophthalmologic, psychiatric, dermatologic and cardiac symptoms.

Suzy has been exhibiting late-stage symptoms, Lida said, including neurological problems such as numbness and tingling in the extremities, a loss of vision and sore joints. She is limited in her ability to attend school.

Suzy has been seen by Squamish physician Dr. Laverne Kindree, who has compiled a large volume of information about Lyme disease. (Kindree's daughter has been diagnosed with Lyme disease.) Suzy was first diagnosed with Lyme disease in Prague in the Czech Republic in 1994. However, the B.C. provincial laboratory, on two separate occasions in 1995, did test for Lyme disease and the tests came up negative. Another blood sample sent to Prague at the same time as one of the 1995 B.C. tests showed Suzy does have Lyme disease, Lida said.

But without a diagnosis in B.C., Lida said she could not arrange the appropriate treatment for Suzy. With the help of Kindree, an appointment was made for Suzy to see Dr. Dorothy Pietrucha, a pediatric neurologist in Neptune, New Jersey who specializes in Lyme disease in children.

An article published by Pietrucha, available on the Internet's World Wide Web, says that the diagnosis of Lyme disease "is a clinical one, not a laboratory one. If the patient's symptoms are compatible with the diagnosis, the patient is ill, the disease is having a significant effect on the person's ability to function, then they deserve treatment. I believe it is safer to be aggressive and treat someone under those circumstances than to allow them to continue suffering indefinitely."

Lida will have to pay the entire cost of the medical bill and for travel, food and accommodation for Suzy's appointment in Jersey, scheduled for May 9. (There was a six-month wait for the appointment.)

Lida said she has tried to obtain financial assistance from the B.C.

Medical Services Plan to no avail. A Nov. 3, 1995 statement from B.C. Children's Hospital says, "If that's not appropriate, we'd make the required recommendations to the Ministry of Health to make it possible for her to get her to where she needs to be treated."

A trust account at Squamish Credit Union set up last year in the name of Suzy Carter remains open to help with the expenses for treatment for Suzy.

New listings added to The Chief's TV guide this week

Since Reliance Distributors added two new channels to the basic cablevision package several weeks ago, we and they have had numerous calls wondering when the new channel listings would be appearing in the Mountain Voice television guide produced weekly in The Squamish Chief. If you check the guide this week, you will see the Newsworld channel and Youth Television listings at the bottom of each day's programming. Sorry it took so long, and thanks for your patience.

Mercier acclaimed Reform candidate

West Vancouver chartered accountant and businessman Jim Mercier won the Reform Party of British Columbia nomination to run in the West Vancouver-Garibaldi riding in the next provincial election by acclamation Thursday night. Mercier, 54, is a mortgage-investment banker and former Burnaby councillor. His brother Dave Mercier was an environment minister in the Social Credit cabinet of former premier Bill Bennett.

Jim Mercier

Mercier will be up against NDP candidate Brenda Broughton, Socred candidate Mike Becker, Liberal candidate Ted Nebbeling and Green candidate Peggy Stortz in pursuit of the West Vancouver-Garibaldi riding seat in the election which is expected to be called any day.

Driver Escapes Serious Injury In Saturday Night Mishap

There were major injuries to the car but only minor injuries to the driver when he caught the soft shoulder and rolled into the ditch while driving northbound at Murrin Park at 10:30 p.m. Saturday. Police issued the driver with a 24-hour roadside suspension of his drivers licence because alcohol was involved in the mishap. David Donaldson photo

District finally finds solution to climber parking problems

By Ron Enns

Almost every weekend from spring to fall and even on some in winter, vehicles line both sides of Loggers Lane. The owners of the cars and trucks — many of them pricey four-wheel drive sport utility vehicles and many of them bearing Washington licence plates — have come to Squamish to climb its world-famous granite, but have been displaced from parking in the residential Hospital Hill area. A small, rutted and muddy parking lot just off Loggers Lane north of the Hwy. 99-Cleveland Avenue intersection is perpetually full of vehicles.

The climbing community in Squamish has been lobbying for years for the resolution of the parking issue for Smoke Bluffs climbers and hikers. Arrangements with landowners adjacent to the District of Squamish's small piece of land where the current parking lot is located have been attempted, but never finalized, until now. The district has entered into a two-year lease with Garibaldi Granite to use some of its land for a parking lot. The district was accepting tenders from companies to bid on the work to upgrade the land to handle about 100 vehicles on a gravelled lot.

The lease area is much bigger than the area that will be made into a parking lot. The size of the area being improved is was determined by the amount of money council has budgeted for the project, said Bob Kusch, District of Squamish parks and recreation director.

A recently improved B.C. Hydro road leading from the parking lot to the climbing crags and hiking trails will remain in place. There will be a gate installed at the bottom of the road to keep vehicles out.

A two-year lease was chosen because the area is filled with hog fuel wood waste.

"It was determined that it wasn't in the district's best interest to purchase it," Kusch said, adding that the land may have to be rehabilitated some day. "In the interim we've got the lease while we look at other options of how to provide parking."

One option is to provide more parking on the west side of Loggers Lane on land that the district acquired in exchange for some land that was turned over last fall to the province for the creation of the Stawamus Chief provincial park as part of the provincial government's Nature Legacy of B.C. program. (At the Chief park announcement, Mayor Corinne Lonsdale said the Loggers Lane land was destined to become part of a District of Squamish nature legacy.) Another option is to some day in the future outright purchase the land leased from Garibaldi Granite, although council has yet to debate that possibility, Kusch said.

The deadline for bids for the parking lot work was last Friday. A report from the parks and recreation department will be presented to council May 7 and the work is planned to be completed by the end of May, Kusch said. Kusch said the a parking lot is needed to designate an area for Smoke Bluffs users, especially considering that parking is no longer permitted in the Hospital Hill area. Parking was allowed on a partially developed cul de sac until last year, when the district put in place "residents parking only" signs after area residents complained about the traffic generated by Smoke Bluffs users.

"It's the first step to trying to resolve all of those conflicts that took place last year that were before council," Kusch said.

"Definitely one of the key features of this whole thing is that it is known that there are a lot of people coming from outside the community to use the Smoke Bluffs because they are so popular. There is an interest in giving them the proper amenities to be able to come here — and that includes sufficient and adequate parking." It is believed that there are between 25,000 and 35,000 user days a year at the Smoke Bluffs.

Squamish is recognized as the premiere rock climbing area in Canada and one of the best places to climb in North America.

Teachers blast no-strike legislation

By Rahoul Ghose

Local teachers' union officials are calling the provincial government's collective bargaining legislation, which passed after a rare weekend sitting of the legislature, a "pre-emptive strike" aimed at stopping any strike activity in the months leading up to a provincial election.

Alex Miller, president of the Howe Sound Teachers' Association, said though he had only seen small parts of the government's Education and Health Bargaining Assistance Act, the new bill will make it difficult for B.C. teachers to pursue their current course, seeking a strike mandate in light of the slow pace in current contact negotiations. Teachers, who now fall under provincial bargaining, have been without a contract for two years and have been negotiating with the ministry for more than seven months. But despite more than 70 days face-to-face at the bargaining table only a few of 123 issues in the provincial contract have been signed off.

The new bill will allow the government to intervene where collective bargaining has broken down in either school, college or health care negotiations in order to assist both parties to reach an agreement and avert a work stoppage, Premier Glen Clark said in a press release Friday.

The bill will give the government the ability to make binding the terms and conditions recommended by an industrial inquiry commission or mediator.

Water rushes from lava flow

Volcanic eruption left huge reservoir Squamish could tap into

By Ron Enns

The solution to Squamish's search of the past few years for a voluminous and pure source of ground water was initiated when the volcanic Mt. Garibaldi last erupted, probably about 7,000 years ago.

When Mt. Garibaldi erupted, a huge flow of lava poured into the Mamquam River valley, right on top of the water, trapping it and burying the valley. The flow stopped after about 17 kilometres and was an average of about seven kilometres wide and about 100 metres deep. Today it is still visible as vegetation slowly takes root amongst the volcanic rock. The Mamquam River runs just to the south of the lava flow and Ring Creek is on the other side. And still remaining under the flow is a giant reservoir of water where the Mamquam River once flowed. When it rains and when surface snow melts, water slowly percolates all the way through the lava layer, constantly filling a water reservoir beneath more than 100 square kilometres of lava. Near the terminus of the lava flow, the overflow pops out in the form of Powerhouse Creek, just east of Valleycliffe in the vicinity of the under-construction Northern Utilities run of the river hydroelectric project on the Mamquam River.

The Powerhouse Creek source is one of two potential community ground water sources — the district is currently installing a test production well along Mamquam River just east of where Mashiter Creek joins the Mamquam. The district is forging ahead with the ground water work, given the desire of provincial and federal environmental agencies to limit the use of surface sources in Squamish. Currently, Squamish's water supply is obtained from Stawamus River and Mashiter Creek.

Another reason ground water is becoming an attractive alternative for Squamish is that it cannot be easily contaminated by external sources and will be not subject to surface water treatment rules, which are expected to eventually be instituted in Canada. In the United States, stringent surface water treatment rules for drinking water were imposed in 1988. The new rules caused many communities to switch from surface water sources to naturally filtered ground water sources. Those that maintained surface water sources installed expensive water treatment plants — most simulate the natural filtration process using slow sand filtration — in order to pass the new standards. (Twenty metres of sandy gravels will filter out absolutely everything, said Squamish geological engineer Frank Baumann, who is a consultant for the Polaris bottled water company.)

Baumann said that when health costs arising from illnesses tied to unfiltered water are considered, the dollar value of long-term benefits of filtration makes it worth switching to fully filtered water.

"It's only a matter of time before Canada will see the light of day" and insist that water must be fully filtered, he said.

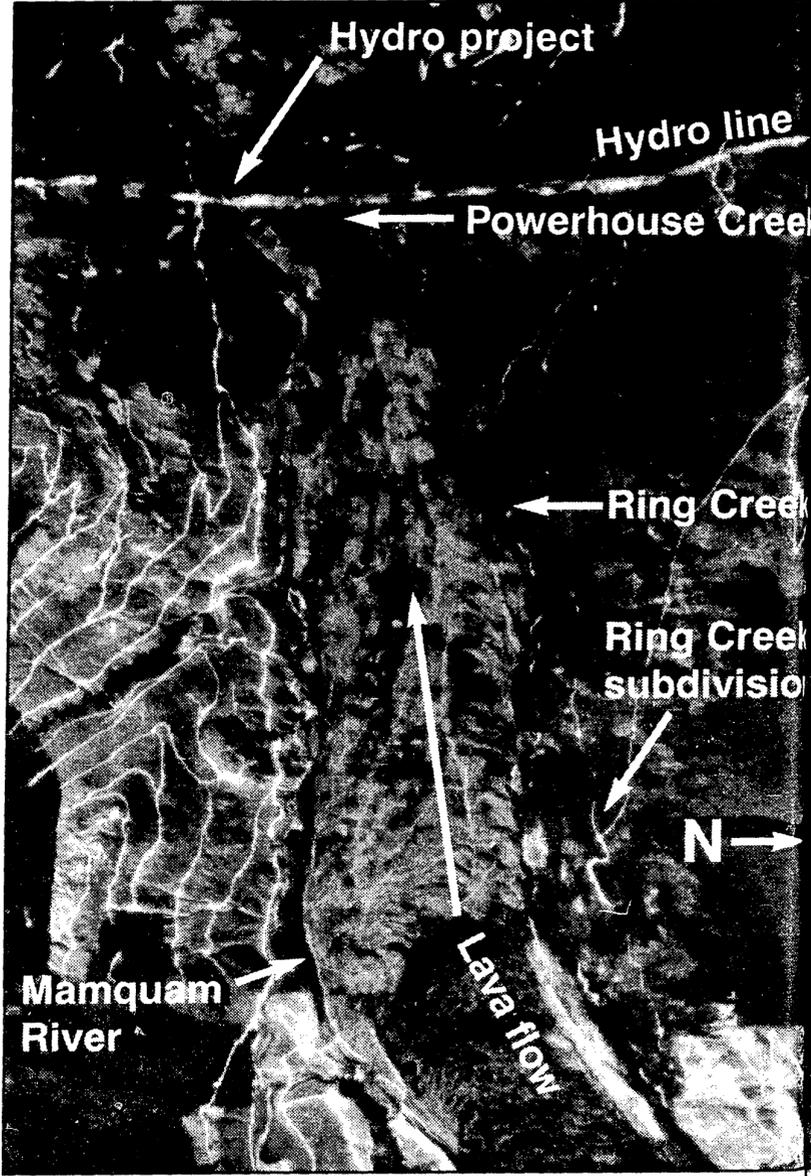

"If Vancouver's water supply was 30 kilometres south in Washington State, they would not be allowed to operate for even a minute and all the public officials would be in jail."

The problems associated with unfiltered surface water sources include chlorination, turbidity and the threat of giardia and cryptosporidium cysts being present in the water.

early 1980s switched from surface water to ground water.

As well, the growing popularity of in-house water filters — the majority of which do not filter out giardia or cryptosporidium cysts — gives a false sense of security, Baumann said.

So far, it appears that the only drawback to the ground water source at the test production well on the Mamquam fan is the unus-

With ground water, less chlorination is required than with surface water. When the turbidity — that is, the sedimentation — of the water increases, as it often does during heavy rains and periods of snowmelt runoff, the level of chlorination is further increased in an attempt to kill organic matter — including giardia and cryptosporidium cysts — in the water. But the problem with increasing the level of chlorination is the resulting formation of trihalomethanes, or THMs, some of which are carcinogenic. THMs form from the interaction of chlorine and organic substances naturally present in the raw water.

So far, Squamish has been lucky that its water supply has not been contaminated by giardia and cryptosporidium cysts. Chlorination does not guarantee that giardia cysts will be killed, and once giardia — which causes intestinal illnesses commonly called beaver fever — is in the water distribution system, it can spread. 100 Mile House and Banff both lost their community water supplies due to giardia contamination. 100 Mile House did stay with its surface water source and added a slow sand filtration system. Banff in the ally high, but naturally occurring, presence of iron well above guidelines for Canadian drinking water quality, according to a summary of ground water chemistry data compiled for the district. The iron is not dangerous for consumption; it is only esthetically unpleasant due to the resulting coloration and there a taste associated with it. However, iron is usually easy to get rid of by aerating the water. A brown precipitate is formed, which is then filtered off.

As well, because the water at the test production well could be coming from an iron-laden stagnant aquifer, if the water is kept running day after day the aquifer could recharge itself with water that has oxygen in it, which would get rid of the iron. Polaris did put in an offer to purchase the property, but turned it down because of the financial risk associated with the presence of iron in the water, Baumann said.

The district at the same time will be doing further exploration at Powerhouse Creek, where a massive spring trapped under lava thousands of years ago could supply Squamish with a reliable water source for some time.

Crown wins new trial in pollution case

Brent Mudry
Special to The Chief

The B.C. Supreme Court has ordered a new trial after CanadianOxy Chemicals (now called CXY Chemicals) was acquitted on two counts of polluting Cattermole Slough and Howe Sound by a provincial court judge two years ago. In a decision released Friday, B.C. Supreme Court Justice Ross Collver ruled that Judge C. I. Walker made mistakes in law when he rejected a government biologist's evidence that the chemical discharge was dangerous to fish. The appeal win by Crown prosecutor Peter Favell came almost a year after Justice Collver reviewed the case in a two-day hearing last May. The case traces back to Dec. 16, 1992 when CdnOxy dumped almost 73,000 litres of sodium chlorate into Cattermole Slough. The spill occurred when company employees failed to properly set and monitor control valves when transferring the chemical from a dissolving tank into a storage tank at the plant, which is now closed. The first count, laid under B.C.'s Waste Management Act, charged that CdnOxy produced effluent waste into the environment, which was capable of damaging the environment. The second count, laid under the Federal Fisheries Act, charged that CdnOxy deposited a dangerous or "deleterious" substance into waters frequented by fish. The Crown's successful appeal hinged largely on the issue of sodium chlorate's toxicity to fish and other marine life. At trial, Judge Walker rejected the contention, claiming that government biologists failed to present adequate proof to the court. Judge Walker said biologist Brent Moore relied on Environment Canada testing data that measures the chemical's toxicity in fresh water. "I have some doubt here as to the proof of it in salt water," the judge said.

The judge was persuaded by the CdnOxy lawyer, who attacked the biologist's professional opinion. Under cross-examination, Moore admitted he had not personally conducted studies about the effects of sodium chlorate on fish, but relied on an Environment Canada publication and other scientific literature.

The judge's rejection of the biologist's testimony was ironic, as lawyers and judges themselves are rarely if ever expected to have first-hand knowledge of historic legal decisions on which their profession is based.

In the appeal decision, Justice Collver ruled it was irrelevant whether the sodium chlorate was introduced into fresh or salt water. Justice Collver said the law clearly states that for a conviction, a chemical must only be shown to be "capable" of causing harm to the environment. The senior judge said one Crown witness had seen coho and chinook smolts, pink and chum salmon fry, flounders and crabs in the area of the slough, and the Crown did not have to show any dead fish in court to prove its case.

Favell had no comment on the decision, but said the company has 30 days to file an appeal to the B.C. Court of Appeal.

Council is holding this public meeting before giving third reading to amendments to the Official Community Plan. These amendments would provide for the expansion of the local airport and will result in a significant increase in taxes on every household in Squamish for many years to come.

We are opposed to this airport expansion because it will result in a deterioration in the quality of life of the people in the Squamish area. We would get air pollution and noise from large planes landing and taking off day or night and get nothing in return.

Please attend this important public meeting and support us in our opposition to the proposed changes to the Official Community Plan.

Squamish Scouts need adult help

Over the years, many people in Squamish have participated in the Scouting movement, either here or in the communities where they grew up. Boy Scouts in Squamish have been an integral part of the community through their citizenship efforts, forestry and fisheries conservation projects, outdoor activities and general life skills. Enrolment has been growing steadily, indicating community support for the values Scouting teaches young people.

Scouting participants here in Squamish have been led by some extremely dedicated adult members, who have been the reason for the growth in membership. But in the past few years these leaders have seen their own children grow up through the movement and move into society and get on with their own lives. As a result, there is now a shortage of adults involved, to the point where current leaders fear if more participation from parents and others throughout the community is not shown, Scouting in Squamish could be seriously curtailed for the coming year, or even canceled completely.

Scouts are in need of adult help as fund raisers, group chairperson, vice-chair, secretary, quartermaster, fisheries liaison, public relations coordinator, program liaison, district commissioner and youth leaders for all sections. This may seem like a lot of positions to fill, but on their own, each task is not overwhelming. Over the past few years, leaders have had to take on two or three tasks at once to cover all the necessary work. At this point, many of them are either retiring now or will be in the near future.

In addition to the tremendous disappointment to those already in the various levels of Scouting, downsizing or cancelling the programs would mean they would have to give up the large volume of equipment at their disposal, as well as turning over any remaining funds, cabin properties and transportation to other groups. Many of the volunteers have spent countless hours building up these resources for the young people involved today and in the future. It would be heart-wrenching to have to give that up because of lack of community interest.

Many people in Squamish frequently bemoan the lack of activities in the community for young people. Scouting is one activity which, over the years, has provided a great many young people with a focus, life skills, and superb community values. It sure beats having those in the different levels of Scouting adding to the crowds of young people hanging around the shopping centres or convenience stores, getting into progressively more trouble.

If you can help in any way, there will be a meeting at Mamquam Elementary School gym May 14 at 7 p.m. to provide more information on the help needed and jobs to be performed. If you would like to help but can't attend the meeting, call Aivar Teteris at 898-4012. Let's show our young people we care.

Young girl needs help

On Page 2 of the Squamish Chief this week, readers will find a story about 14-year-old Suzy Carter, who is suffering from Lyme disease and needs treatment from a specialist in New Jersey. Provincial authorities denied for many years the presence of ticks which carry the disease, so the ability of most physicians to properly diagnose the disease, never mind treat it, is limited.

Without a diagnosis in B.C., Suzy's mom, Lida Carter can't arrange for the proper treatment. Well respected Squamish doctor Laverne Kindree has arranged an appointment with the New Jersey specialist. But the Carters need help with their travel, accommodation and living expenses as well as the medical bills for treatment. A trust fund for Suzy has been set up at the Squamish Credit Union. We urge people to help as much as possible to give Suzy a chance to regain the health most of us take for granted.

The height of stupidity

Throughout our lives we all do stupid things, some of which we are lucky enough to live to regret. Acts of stupidity know no age barriers. Adults and children can be equally guilty.

But a few young people are reaching the absolute height of stupidity these days when they play chicken with the B.C. Rail trains chugging through the downtown area. The most glaring example of cranial malfunction took place at noon Wednesday, when a few young people playing chicken with a B.C. Rail train on the tracks where the old passenger station used to be near Howe Sound Secondary School forced the engineer to throw the train into emergency stop.

When that happens, the brakes all lock up and the train goes skidding down the tracks, steel against steel. The average freight train pulling 100 cars travelling at 25 kilometres per hour takes almost one kilometre to stop. A passenger train, running along at 50-60 kilometres per hour takes even longer to stop. So even if a train is slowing down after the brakes are applied, a young person could still be run over. One stumble, a fall, and parents and friends would be in mourning while the train's crew tried to recover from what would be a most grisly scene. No matter how invincible these young people might feel, they don't stand a chance if they fall in front of a freighter.

But there are other safety factors to consider, which could expose anyone in the downtown or Dentville areas to extreme danger. B.C. Rail freighters often haul tanker cars filled with toxic or explosive substances: propane, liquefied butane, chlorine, hydrogen peroxide, sodium hydroxide and others. Throwing on the emergency brakes of a moving train can cause a derailment. In a derailment, when cars leave the tracks, even the best built tankers can spring a leak, which could release a cloud or toxic or explosive chemicals over a wide area, including the school.

Such an accident could block the traffic at the crossing on Cleveland Avenue, making it impossible for the emergency vehicles in the downtown area to respond. Delays could cost hour delay in getting a person to the hospital could mean the difference between life and death. An innocent person could die because a few zip heads are playing chicken with the train.

Also to be considered is the cost of these actions to B.C. Rail. Train crews have just so much time to travel from point to point, so when they are even more lives. I don't like the idea of a few thick-headed idiots of any age putting so many lives, including my own, in jeopardy.

Even if a train is slowing down after the brakes are applied, a young person could still be run over.

As it is, the incident on Wednesday created problems for a lot of people. When the emergency system on the train is activated, it takes at least 20 minutes for the air pressure to rebuild sufficiently to release the brakes, so the train can be moved. So people had to sit on Cleveland going either way for at least 30 minutes while the brakes powered up again.

What if there had been an accident in the downtown area in the meantime? The police would not have been able to get in, and the fire department or ambulance would not have been able to get out. A half-delayed while the brakes power up again, the company might have to bring in a whole new crew to complete the job. And train wheels skidding along the steel tracks wears spots on the wheels. If the damage is bad enough, B.C. Rail could have to replace all the wheels on every car, including the engine. I can't even imagine the cost of that, never mind how long it would take.

I know full well it is only a small number of young people who are playing chicken with the trains and putting their own lives and the lives of many others in danger. But in doing so, as usual, they are giving all young people a bad name. The vast majority of young people in this town are rational and sensible, often more so than the adults who tend to stereotype them.

Perhaps this majority can use a bit of peer pressure to stop this game of chicken before one or more of the perpetrators get killed, before their actions jeopardize the lives of a lot of people from downtown to Dentville, or leave the area a smoldering crater as a permanent monument to stupidity.

Camping at Alice Lake a noisy, sleepless experience

On April 13 we were camping after our two weeks from Vancouver the weekend. We went to Alice Lake for a night's camping where they ever excited. Everything was perfect.

Our camp was set, our fire burning and our beautiful after a busy, fun day at Alice Lake. We were on holiday and needed a good night's sleep. The boys took the boys and Aunt Lois stayed and to get the beds made, make hot chocolate and have a few minutes of peace and quiet.

Well, that did not last. A few vehicles turned up opposite our site and out of a pile of young people.

One of them yelled to the security truck passing by and went up to the driver for a few words. I thought "good, the security guard knows the site is occupied by a young crowd and will be checking on them."

It was getting dark quickly. Marty and the boys were soon back. We sat around the fire drinking hot chocolate before the boys crawled into their cozy bags for a good sleep. About 9:30 p.m. Marty and I sat by the fire listening to the boys snore and the rap music getting louder.

We went to bed at 10 p.m. thinking the security guard would soon be around for quiet time. How wrong we were.

The voices got louder, the music got louder and the vulgar language was disgraceful. Finally, fights broke out and car lights and engines were switched on and revved up. This went on until 2:30 a.m.

Thankfully, our nephews slept through it (must have been all the fresh air). They were awake early in the morning for another eventful day.

At breakfast the park lady came around and we made a complaint. She still took our money.

She went to the site opposite, collected no money as they were gone, and had a lot of work to do cleaning up their mess. After breakfast we packed up our gear and left no mess.

We paid our money and had no sleep. Thanks a lot, Alice Lake.

Schools need condom machines

Did you know that Squamish has the highest teenage pregnancy and abortion rate in all of B.C.? It is a pretty scary fact to both teenagers and parents. In the past five years that is 205 Squamish teens too many, so what can we do about it?

My suggestion is to put condom machines in the secondary schools. I know many parents oppose the idea of having condom machines in schools, but I think that with these astounding facts and numbers, we have no other choice. Many secondary schools have special guest speaker and programs which teach the risks of having sex and abstinence, but teens are still not doing it, and many are still getting pregnant.

We need to do more and teach responsibility. One kind of responsibility comes in the form of a condom. Some of the concerns parents have is that condom machines promote sex. That is not entirely correct. They promote safer sex. Who is to say that giving a condom will make him or her jump out and jump in the sack? Some parents are also concerned that teens aren't mature enough to have the machines in schools. I'm not going to sit around the bush, there will always be the few immature losers who will goof around with the condoms, but after a while they will tire of it. To quote one of my good friends: "We have better things to do than spend our time planning our next condom water balloon attack."

Many high schools in British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario have had proven successful results with the machines. So why don't we try it here? I think the teens who are having sex will be glad to have easier access to protection and be relieved to not have to continue going into the drug store, risking running into their mom's best friend, dad's co-worker or worse, their parents.

We all know that condoms are 98 per cent effective against pregnancy, but they also protect teens from many sexually transmitted diseases, and deadly diseases such as AIDS. So in the long run, we could prevent someone from having to face early parenthood or a deadly disease by putting in the condom machines. No matter what, teenagers are still going to have sex. Wouldn't it make you feel better if you knew they were doing so more safely?

Soo Coalition slams PAS draft

Received by The Chief for publication:

Honourable Dennis Streifel,
Minister of Forests,
Victoria, B.C.

Dear Minister Streifel:

The Soo Coalition has been keeping abreast of the PAS negotiations and we would like to register our concerns with the draft proposal.

There are three forest districts in the Lower Mainland region. The Squamish Forest District (24 per cent of the region's land base, the smallest amount of working forest, and the largest percentage of land in existing parks) is now faced with 50 per cent of the new proposed parks being created in it, despite the original terms of reference. We are looking at double the impact of the other districts.

The two largest of the proposed protected areas contain working forest that our district is relying on to maintain the allowable annual cut, thus jobs, for the next 20 years. The removal of this area will cause unacceptable job loss in our communities of Pemberton and Squamish.

There is supposed to be a mitigation package with this proposal that will ease the impacts and ensure stability in the woods. Two of the important ones are: "no more parks in the Lower Mainland" and "the environmental groups represented at the table promise not to try have more parks created." The wording in the package does not say this. It says that the PAS process is completed in the Lower Mainland and the environmental groups promise not to alter or change the boundaries of the new parks.

There is nothing to say new parks will not be created for other reasons.

In fact, one of our members has been told by the environmentalists at the table that they expect another 10 per cent will be added to parks, after the process is completed, because of communities insisting areas such as the East Howe Sound be preserved.

Premier Glen Clark stated that he wants 21,000 jobs created in the forest industry by the year 2000. How can this be accomplished when the land base that provides the raw product is being eroded and the allowable annual cut is being reduced? The costs are skyrocketing. The smaller companies are faced with having to close their doors, not creating jobs.

We request you take a close look at your new ministerial and the social and economic impacts that will arise from land use decisions.

Proposed airport, industrial park changes under fire

Received by The Chief for publication:

To the mayor and council:

The Brackendale Farmers Institute wants to take this opportunity to go on record as being unalterably opposed to any further broadening of use at our local airport.

This airport was created by local effort for local use, at minimal cost to the municipality, and was intended as a convenience locally and also for use as an emergency landing strip.

The present level of use is creating more noise than we should reasonably be expected to endure. We feel that the present use should be reviewed with reduction of noise levels in mind — which we feel could be achieved with cooperation from all concerned.

Nick Candy
President

Brackendale Farmers Institute

Received by The Chief for publication:

Margaret Ann Thornton
Community Planning Director

On behalf of my family and myself, we feel that any change to the existing airport will have a negative effect on the quality of life we are enjoying in Brackendale. Any increase in air traffic means increased noise and pollution, as well as increased risk in the safety of our children, particularly since the airport is located near the schools. We strongly feel that no changes should be made to the bylaw without holding a referendum.

Walter Lambert
Squamish

Editor,

With reference to Ron Enns's article of April 1996, the Council explores changes to permitted uses in the industrial park, it is absolutely incredible that Mayor Corinne Lonsdale can vote against a factory outlet near the airport because she believes that Squamish is not ready for it at this time.

Is Squamish not ready for it at this time because it is a superabundance of retail clothing stores and shops? Conversely, was Lonsdale's vote in support of the Gulf Pacific development due to her perception of Squamish as being underserved in the grocery and fast food industries?

Avid sailor, climber dies in boating accident

Ron Enns

Squamish man with an intense love for the outdoors died in a tragic accident near Campbell River.

Ray Matys, who was sailing in the area with his wife Nancy Seuschek, died from drowning April 16. He was 52 years of age.

Ray, who was raised in Ontario, lived in Squamish since 1993. When he moved here after spending five years rock climbing in Yosemite, Calif., he bought a sailboat and totally restored it. Ray and Nancy lived aboard their boat and spent much of their time sailing all around the West Coast. Ray grew up around sailboats and learned to sail as a youngster in Ontario and the Caribbean.

Ray was an avid rock climber who emphasized safety. He honed his climbing skills in Yosemite and loved to do big wall climbs on the Stawamus Chief after he moved to Squamish. He liked hiking and being in the outdoors just as much as climbing. He found his place in B.C. and said he could live here the rest of his life," Nancy said.

Ray had a wonderful philosophy of life, Nancy said in a eulogy to Ray.

He made it clear to me that he thought people need to create a situation for themselves where they would be happy and healthy.

The reason people needed to be healthy and happy was so they would be calm and at peace with themselves and would naturally want to reach out to others. The word for this concept is brotherhood. Ray loved people."

Ray will be sadly missed by Nancy, his family and many friends.

Council committee meetings now open to the public

A new format for council committee structure will allow members of the public to sit in on the meetings if they wish.

Council has disbanded even of its standing committees — including works and services, planning, personnel, finance, protective services, transit and economic development — and lumped together all matters previously dealt with by these committees to be now dealt with by a committee of the whole. The committee of the whole consists of the entire council. Instead of the former committees meeting at various times and on various days of the week, the committee of the whole will meet for most of the day the second Tuesday of the month and, if necessary, the fourth Tuesday of the month. Regular council meetings are held the first and third Tuesdays of the month. With the former committee structure, meetings were closed to the public and media. The new format allows the public and media to attend the meetings.

Council Byelection - May 11

| Ethics and Conflict Of Interest → The Candidates ↓ | How would you ensure council members act ethically and avoid becoming involved in conflicts of interest? | How can council ensure taxpayers it is working in their best interests rather than for personal gain? | What is your position on the use of in camera — closed to the public — meetings by committees and council? |
|--|--|--|--|
| Terrill Patterson  | I can't nor can anyone else, however, my being there would. | By conducting municipal business openly. | Public business should be conducted public. |
| Lynn Wilbur  | Conflict of interest is an ethical question and a legal matter. The Municipal Act gives council and the public very clear direction on this issue. The act is also clear that "a person who contravenes (the act) is disqualified from continuing to hold office." My position is when a councillor becomes disqualified I will move to have that person removed from office. | By removing themselves from the discussion and the voting on issues where they may personally gain financially. By respecting and adhering to plans which have been put in place with public consultation. By keeping taxes in check. By spending tax dollars from a coordinated planning perspective. | My position is that all council meetings and committee meetings be open for the public to attend. The only exceptions are confidential personnel issues and some legal matters. It is also my position that more discussion and decision making be done in public council meetings rather than in committee meetings. |
| Gwyer Webber  | Any council members should not vote on an issue that affects them directly or indirectly, or on any issue that deals with a company they own full or in part, or work for. Any council member that feels another council member might be in a conflict of interest should be able to bring it up at a council meeting and discuss it with all councillors. | Any changes to the OCP should be done neighborhood by neighborhood through the process governed by the Municipal Act every five years, and not done when an interested party wishes to change it for a project. Hold more open houses for public input. Keep to the basics by providing and maintaining good infrastructure for the community. | All meetings that have an in camera should also be open to the public. |
| Gino Pagliardi  | Council members have to vote fairly and honestly. Remove themselves from voting or debating if there is a possibility of conflict of interest. Upon signing qualification papers, candidates should be free of personal business interests, without personal gain of support from patronage. | Keep open books for the public. Proper tendering and hiring by proper qualifications. What is needed is a citizens "watchdog" committee. | Meetings should always be open to the public. |
| Neil McDonald  | Our mayor should decide if a conflict exists, taking responsibility and appropriate action. As well, a citizen conflict of interest committee should be established and given the power to decide, should two or more citizens disagree with our mayor's decision. | The municipality should supply quarterly financial and progress reports. The reports should include, in layman's terms, present budget expenditures, objectives, long-term community objectives and all bylaw amendments. Each council member should prepare a personal mission statement and financial disclosure so citizens can monitor them. | In camera meetings should only be used when dealing with municipal staffing issues, personal problems of employees, and legal matters. They should absolutely not be used for public or private development issues. |
| Debra McBride  | Council is currently being investigated by the inspector of municipalities. The results will be known near the November election. The public must not be eliminated because their questions are not on the agenda or embarrass council, so that council members' terms aren't over before their actions are stopped. | Taxpayers are best served when air, food and water quality are improved. Money equal to that for projects serving tourists must be given to projects serving the poor. To protect the estuary, the public involvement work group must be on the coordinating committee and the administrator controlled. Emergency facilities and more social services are needed. | In camera meetings are allowed to discuss payroll and employment of district staff. To ensure public access to public hearings and council meetings held at night, the buses must be available. The public should be informed of committee meetings and have access to these and transportation. |
| Paul Lalli  | I believe in order for council members to act ethically and avoid becoming involved in conflict of interest, the municipal solicitor should brief all new council members on the conflict legislation so that everyone is clear of what a conflict is and what the legal implications would be if a council member was in a conflict. Council should also implement stricter rules and guidelines. | I feel the burden lies on the citizens of Squamish to ensure that council is working for the people's best interest. What I mean by this is that it is the citizens of Squamish who vote and ultimately create a council, therefore when you go in and vote I hope you are voting for someone who will provide honesty, integrity, who will work for the entire community. | The purpose for in camera meetings is when council is talking about human resource or staff problems, or when individuals have an idea or a proposal that they would initially like to present for council feedback. These meetings, believe, should be used to a minimum under specific circumstances because I still believe in open government. |
| Bill Brown  | Short of hiring Ted Hughes as conflict of interest commissioner, I don't think there is an easy solution. Terrill Patterson has been a pretty good watchdog for us over the years, but council has seen fit to muzzle him. | Council can best assure taxpayers it is working in their best interests by each councillor not only withdrawing from discussion and voting on issues where a clear conflict exists, but by also avoiding situations where a perceived conflict exists. | In camera meetings should be held to an absolute minimum. The uppermost consideration should be given to both public's right to know and the need for confidentiality. |
| Brian Edwards  | All new councillors receive a welcome kit. Included is section 3.19 from the district's policy and procedures manual. (Subject: code of ethics.) If councillors follow these guidelines assiduously there should be no question of personal gain or of municipal decisions being made inappropriately. If you even think about being in a conflict, step aside until an independent ruling is given. | Council can assure taxpayers it is not working for personal gain by writing disclosure of property, financial interests and election contributions. The media is the public watchdog for all conflicts of interest, real or imagined. Keeping taxes down, enhancing services and taking meaningful action on issues typifies a council working in the best interest of its citizens. | In camera meetings are necessary and must continue. No one likes public business to be discussed in secret. However, given close scrutiny of municipal councils over the years, no fairer way to protect the rights of individuals and groups has been found. In camera matters involve land, legal and labor issues. Once a resolution is reached it must be made public. |

Shaved For A Great Cause

Wickendale Secondary School teacher Bill Rizun gets his head shaved Friday by Vicen of Systems Hair Group, while teacher Dan Faye, left, and vice-principal Reibenshuh wait their turn. The two teachers promised to have their heads shaved if students raised more than $400 during their Milk Run for the B.C. Epilepsy Society. Reibenshuh added his name to the list if the students raised more than $500. They brought in more than $400, and the student council kicked in the extra $100. In previous years students have only raised about $60-$70. David Donaldson photo

Police return stolen property

An alert member of the Squamish detachment stopped a white Honda on highway north of Squamish April 20. Whistler police reported some items stolen from a car in that community. Five males aged 17-20 from the Lower Mainland were in the car when it was stopped, and a search of the trunk of the vehicle uncovered a number of CDs, stereo speakers, and an amplifier in Whistler. The victim did not want charges laid, said Const. Fran Bethell, but asked that the stolen material be returned, which was done. No charges were laid.

Point on Hwy. 99 north of Lions Bay April 21 closed the road for 90 minutes and sent one person to Lions Gate Hospital with serious injuries. Police said a southbound vehicle containing one person crossed the double solid line on a corner at 11 a.m., entering the northbound lane and striking a northbound vehicle. The driver of the southbound vehicle was taken to hospital while the pair in the northbound vehicle were treated for minor injuries at the scene by B.C. Ambulance Service members. The driver of the southbound vehicle has been charged with failure to keep right and driving a vehicle with inadequate tire tread. Police estimate the total damage to both vehicles at $9,000.

Police are still investigating after they discovered a brown 1975 GMC van burned on the Mac Blo road, following a report from a citizen. The van, registered to an owner in North Vancouver, was not reported as stolen. Police are also investigating what happened to a white Porsche which was dropped off at a Squamish business for repairs and ended up needing far more repairs than the owner had bargained for. The vehicle was found April 23 with its front end over the bank into the Mashiter River. The rear window was also smashed out by a boulder which was found in the back seat. Police have no suspects at this time.

Four vehicles were reported vandalized sometime overnight April 23-24 at a business on Industrial Way. Three of the vehicles were tampered with but nothing was stolen, but the culprits opened a zipper in the soft top of the fourth vehicle and took a car radio. The investigation is continuing.

Squamish police received a report from a resident at 3 a.m. April 21 that a prowler had been seen going through the back yards of homes in the Eagle Run area. Within 15 minutes they got another call that a resident had apprehended the prowler in the bushes just off Judd Road. As a result of a police investigation, an 18-year-old Squamish male has been charged with trespass by night, and breaking and entering with intent to commit an indictable offence. Const. Fran Bethell said the man had a camera, balaclava and gloves in his possession when he was caught, and further investigation revealed the suspect had allegedly attempted to break into a residence on Add Road. A window in the residence was found to be open and a jewelry box was on the ground outside the window. The man is scheduled to appear in court May 28.

Police Blotter

We generally go along with the victim's wishes when they are reasonable, said Bethell. "Sometimes the don't want charges laid because of the hassles of appearing in court, or they are afraid of retaliation. We encourage people to press charges, because the only way the criminal justice system works is if everyone does their part, including testifying in court. But without the victim's cooperation we couldn't lay charges."

At 11 p.m. April 20, police stopped two men in a vehicle on Second Avenue in the downtown area on a routine traffic check. As a result, a 20-year-old Squamish male has been charged with possession of a narcotic for what police believe to be a half-gram of cocaine. He is scheduled to appear in Squamish Provincial Court May 21.

Forestry, SLRD declare truce in logging dispute

Squamish Forest District manager agrees with fine appeal over unauthorized tree cutting

By Andy Stonehouse

A small but lengthy dispute which questioned whether one level of government should fine another for a logging operation ordered by yet another level of government has been settled by both parties.

The Squamish-Lillooet Regional District has agreed to pay a $230 fine to the Ministry of Forests following an unauthorized cutting of timber at the Pemberton landfill site.

Last fall, Squamish Forest District manager Paul Kuster assessed the regional district with a $1,700 fine when Forest Service staff discovered a regional district crew had cut a small patch of trees in September 1993 in order to provide a forest fire buffer zone at the landfill.

At the time, the regional district appealed the fine as the cutting had been done as a requirement for a Ministry of Environment burn permit — an action called "unnecessarily heavy-handed" by former regional district administrator Ivan Knowles.

Last month, regional operations manager Tim Sheldon released an appeal review on the dispute and suggested that while the regional district had in fact contravened the Forest Act, the fine assessed was probably done in haste.

"It is inappropriate for one level of government to penalize another level of government for administrative oversight — it is the taxpayer who would ultimately be penalized," Sheldon said.

Instead, Sheldon recommended that the regional district instead pay the bill for administrative costs, namely the scaling costs for the dozen trees illegally cut at the site.

Rick Beauchamp, the regional district's new administrator, said the directors agreed to this less expensive position during last week's regional district meeting.

"It doesn't mean we treat government any different than we'd treat a private business."

— Paul Kuster

"I think we will have to be more cognizant of our operations in the future with subcontractors," Beauchamp said.

"We were able to come to a compromise, but the details are still being finalized."

Paul Kuster said he realizes an appeal review has demonstrated an important principle about problems of interdepartmental wrangling.

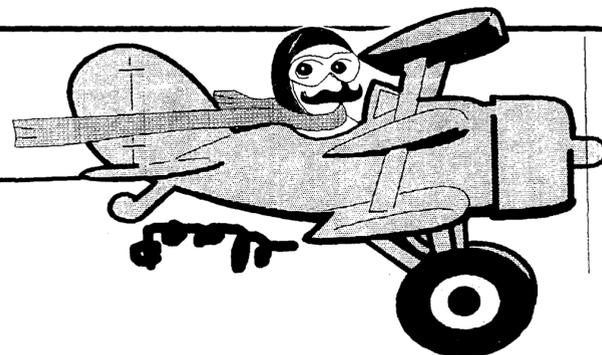

"I'll definitely take it into consideration in the future," Kuster said.

"You can't have one government agency penalizing another as the fines just come out of different taxpayer's pockets."

However, Kuster said his initial ruling was made following the rules of the province, and said he followed the path he thought was correct.

"With the Forest Practices Code everything is a little bit new, but that doesn't exonerate them from what they did. It doesn't mean we treat government any different than we'd treat a private business, especially if it were to happen again."

Hear Ye! Hear Ye! Council decides fate of Airport. Last chance to hear Ye!

Did you know...

- Cascadia Air does not have a FAA licence to operate an airline. This means they have no financial or safety track record! Why is council dealing with a start up company rather than one with experience and a track record?
- All but three airports in B.C. operate at an average loss in revenue. Can we afford this?
- Council ignored a letter from the ministry of environment: stating that the Squamish Airport Development Plan has not "adequately taken into account the hazards at the airport site and the impacts of these hazards on the possible expansion of the airport"? (R.J. Henry, BC. Environment, Letter to council, Dec.20 1994)?
- Council has consistently ignored residents voicing their concerns and asking for clarification?
- That the proposed eagle reserve and the Squamish landfill are closer to the airport than Transport Canada recommends as safe?

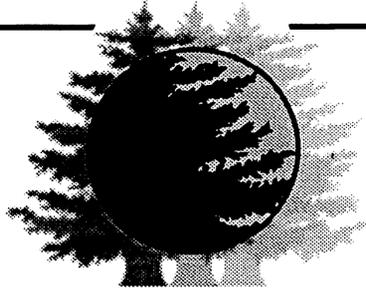

Are you willing to...

- Foot the bill for the infrastructures required to maintain this airport? This is a high risk venture, in a high risk industry.
- Compromise the safety of our children by allowing the industrialisation of the airport, which will increase traffic in school zones?
- Jeopardise the world's largest gathering of Bald Eagles for the convenience of a few hasty Whistler tourists? No studies of the effects of aircraft on large or wintering populations of eagles have been done.
- Allow council to once again change your Official Community Plan for the needs of developers?
- Financially support the airport should Cascadia go bankrupt?
- Ignore the concerns of First Nations once again, by allowing the new flight path over their land and homes?
- Allow Cascadia Airlines an exclusive 40 year lease to operate the airport however they see fit, and to waive landing fees and municipal taxes until infrastructure costs are paid off?

Voice Your Concerns, Thursday, May 2nd, 7:00pm at the Squamish Legion. Our Last Chance to change council's mind.

Park road becoming a regular dump

Ron Enns

An abandoned gravel pit on the road leading to the Diamond Head area of Garibaldi Provincial Park is becoming a regular illegal dumping area.

About half a kilometre up the road, a paved up toilet, grass clippings, construction waste and household waste greet tourists travelling to the popular backcountry area and residents who live on the border of the park. There are more than 20,000 user days at the Diamond Head area — skiing in winter and hiking and mountain biking in summer — and about 25 people live year-round in the Ring Creek subdivision.

The mess along the road has Ring Creek residents and regular users of the road on a campaign to report to conservation officers everyone they see dumping garbage in the area.

One resident recently dug through some of the garbage and found some receipts with an individual's name on it, which was passed on to the conservation officer service.

The Squamish conservation officer service is investigating a couple of files relating to dumping on the Garibaldi park road. Individuals could be charged under the Litter Act and businesses could be charged under the Waste Management Act.

District of Squamish public works director Mike Darbyshire said with the implementation of a new Squamish-Lillooet Regional District solid waste management plan there will be new bylaws relating to illegal dumping, which will be more stringent and more enforceable.

The area where most of the dumping is taking place is within the District of Squamish boundaries. Darbyshire said that district staff have cleaned up the garbage in the past and will do so again. He said signs will be put up at the gravel pit in an effort to let people know dumping is not allowed.

Squamish residents can dispose of their garbage at the municipal landfill. Most of the garbage found on the Garibaldi park road could have been dumped at the landfill for a charge of $5 per load. And on May 4, tipping fees at the dump will be waived as part of the community's spring cleanup campaign.

As well, Darbyshire is exploring the possibility for next year of a central collection area for chipping yard prunings and composting grass clippings. He was recently at a conference in Kelowna, where such a system is in place.

Several areas along the Garibaldi park road are becoming regular dumping grounds, which is disgusting the residents of Ring Creek who have to drive the road every day. Brian Goldstone photo

Acupuncture receives formal recognition from the province

By Ron Enns

Acupuncture is being formally recognized in British Columbia with the establishment of the province's first College of Acupuncturists.

Until now, there was no single regulatory body to set safety and cleanliness standards for acupuncture. There are about seven acupuncture associations — the largest of which is the Acupuncture Association of B.C. — which together have been working toward convincing the province to implement legislation for the acupuncture profession.

The Acupuncture Association of B.C. did already have stringent standards and examinations for its members and has been lobbying the province since its formation in 1987 to legislate regulations.

Acupuncturist Craig Webb, who practices at the Medical Massage Therapy Centre in Squamish and at the North Shore Acupuncture Centre in North Vancouver and who is a member of the Acupuncture Association of B.C., said it is a "very exciting step for the profession of acupuncture to be recognized as a viable health practice in B.C."

Acupuncture has been a traditional part of oriental medicine for centuries and its practice has been growing rapidly in B.C. In addition to private practice, acupuncture is used on the traditional Chinese medicine ward at Vancouver General Hospital. Webb estimated that there are about 400 acupuncturists practicing in B.C. (Without formal regulations governing acupuncturists, the Ministry of Health has a way of knowing how many acupuncturists are actually practicing in the province.)

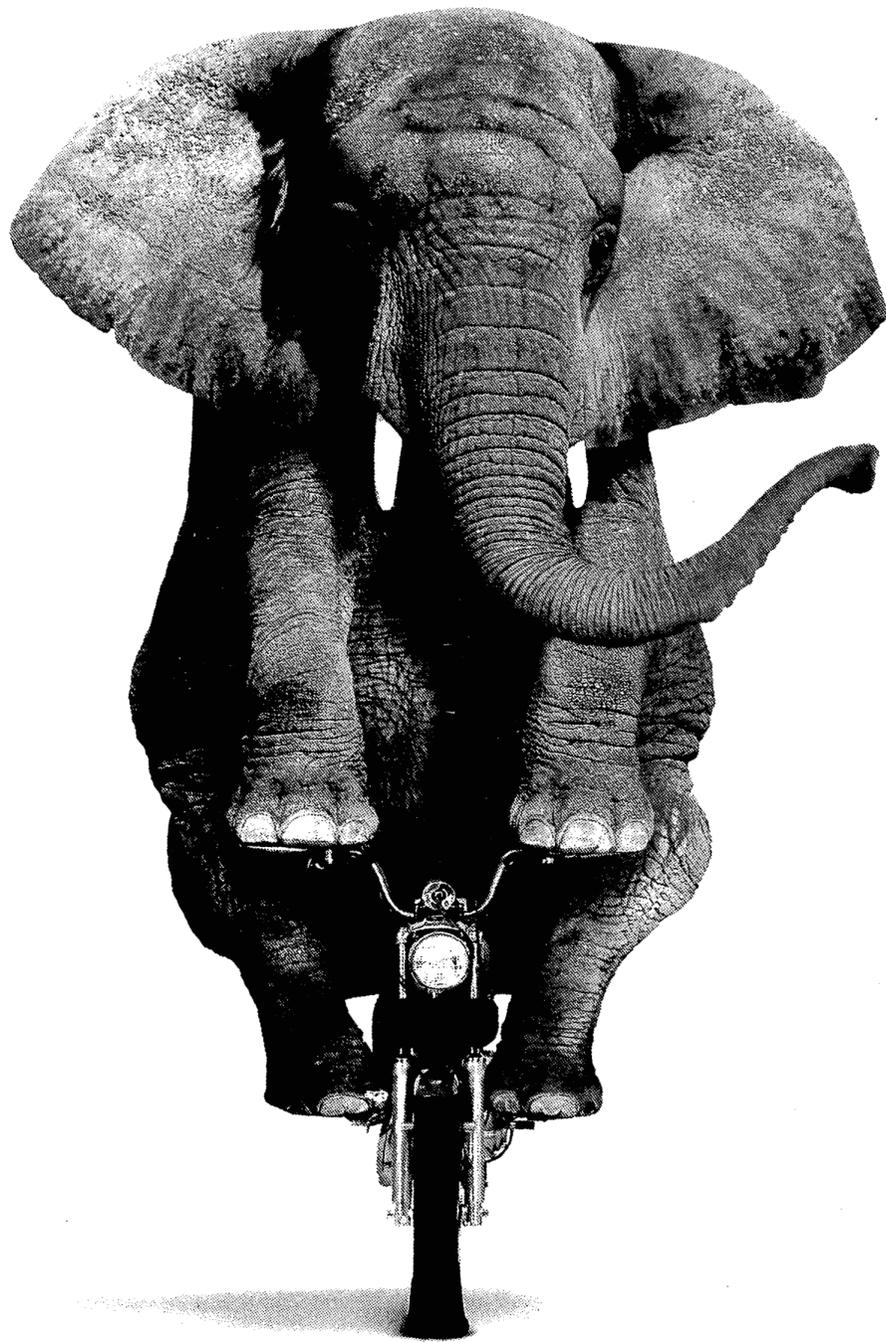

The Acupuncture Association of B.C. has about 250 members. The first board of the College of Acupuncturists, appointed by the health minister recently, has 11 members, including several professional and public members.

Once the board has developed bylaws and established standards for practice and a code of ethics, acupuncturists will have to apply to the college for registration in order to provide acupuncture services in B.C.

Acupuncture services not covered by the Medical Services Plan, health insurance plan available to all British Columbians through the Ministry of Health.

Acupuncture is regulated as an autonomous health profession in Alberta and Quebec and in 20 American states.

Stranded skiers were well prepared

Yanagisawa said that the group's trek was delayed by the conditions they encountered after leaving the Diamond area. "On Sunday night we ran into a total whiteout. We couldn't see anything, so we couldn't move," he said. "I and his two friends passed the time talking. The experienced skiers were well prepared with clothing, a tent, emergency supplies and enough food to last about five to seven days. "We had to camp out," said Yanagisawa. "We just laid down in the tent and talked about the history of each skier. We didn't bring any cards or a radio. We got bored." "Throughout the ordeal, Yanagisawa remained optimistic he and his friends would be rescued. "We knew people must be looking for us because we could hear the sound of a helicopter. There was nothing really we could do." "Lang and Sills said the group behaved responsibly. They realized they were in trouble and they made all the right decisions," Lang said. "They decided to start conserving food and fuel supplies. They actually did the right thing by staying together. They managed to conserve their food and fuel supplies and spent Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday realizing they couldn't do anything, and late Friday there was a bit of a clearing." "Anticipating a long stay on the mountain, on Friday Yanagisawa and his friends rationed out 10 peanuts each as their food supply. When the trio was taken off the mountain, they still had three Powerbars, noodles and a piece of fruit. "They paced themselves, which is great," Lang said. "About 80 centimetres of new snow fell in the area during the storm cycle. Yanagisawa said the skiers had to shovel their tent about 20 times a day. "I think they did everything correctly," said Sills. "It was actually refreshing to see people behave appropriately, given the conditions they found themselves in." "Lang said the skiers will not be charged for any part of the rescue.

Yanagisawa, left, thanks Squamish RCMP Cpl. John Lasseur, centre, and Squamish Emergency Program coordinator Jim Lang after he and his two ski partners were airlifted out of Garibaldi Provincial Park after spending six days in a tent due to blinding snow which created whiteout conditions. Bonnie Makarewicz photo

Brackendale eagles land at Vancouver International Airpo

When the Brackendale Winter Eagles Festival and Count was inaugurated more than a decade ago with 20 people showing up for the count, festival founder Thor Froslev surely had no inkling that more than 11 million people a year would have a chance to experience what it is like to see hundreds of bald eagles in a single place. It certainly is not hard to experience the eagle phenomenon in Brackendale, where in 1994 more than 3,766 eagles were counted on a single day, taking the world record ground cover count away from Haines, Alaska.

Thor, who with his fly rod has been a regular fixture on the rivers of the Squamish valley ever since the highway opened in 1958, moved to Brackendale for its tranquillity, as well as its proximity to the thriving metropolitan centre of Vancouver. He bought a piece land in 1970, moved in 1972 and opened the Brackendale Art Gallery in 1973. He has seen the neighborhood grow up around his gallery during the last quarter century. He has survived the 1979 moving of Hwy. 99 — and his bread and butter, tourists — from its original route along the front of his gallery to bypassing it several kilometres away.

Thor believes that there has been a steady increase in the number of the bald eagles coming to this valley, which he attributes to the destruction of eagle habitat elsewhere. He knows that to keep the eagles here, the rivers that he loves to fish must be protected before it is too late. The health of rivers are threatened by soil erosion associated with clear-cut logging, by Whistler waste water travelling downstream, by human disturbances to the riparian zones and gravel beds of rivers and by the impermeable training dike on the Squamish River that flushes most salmon out to sea without an opportunity to spend some time in the protective habitat of the estuary. (There is now a plan to place more channels and culverts through the dike to allow better fish migration.)

It is the abundant food source — spawning salmon — that brings the eagles to winter in the Squamish valley. Thor has brought worldwide attention — on television and radio, in newspapers, magazines and books — to the plight of the eagles. The provincial government, conservation groups and a forest industry

Expect even more people in the future, now that the 11 million people annually who will pass through the new international departure terminal at Vancouver International Airport will be exposed to a new multi-media exhibit to promote eagles of Brackendale. The airport display, which combines video group has been listening to the cries of the Brackendale eagles. This past winter, the Forest Alliance of B.C. and the Nature Conservancy of Canada announced their partnership in a campaign to preserve and enhance bald eagle habitat in the Squamish valley. The alliance's $2-million, five-year commitment to the project will fund eagle research and property acquisition, and help manage eco-tourism in the Brackendale area. As well, it appears that the provincial government will protect 1,050 hectares where the bald eagles congregate each winter. The land that may be protected as the Brackendale Eagle Reserve is still a far cry from the 20,000-hectare Chilkat eagle reserve near Haines, Alaska, but it's a start.

The diligent efforts of Thor and many others in Squamish — like tireless Squamish Estuary Conservation Society member Len Goldsmith — is finally resulting in the creation of some protected areas to keep the eagles coming to the valley. But it is also bringing the masses of people. The number of visitors travelling to the Squamish neighborhood of Brackendale just to see the gathering of the eagles has increased markedly during the past couple of years.

other elements to entertain people while educating them about the majestic eagles, is intended to promote the Forest Alliance and Nature Conservancy eagles of Brackendale project. Already this past winter, eagle interpreters on the dikes along the rivers were shepherding the influx of eagle gawkers, teaching them the ethics and guidelines associated with eagle viewing.

Fortunately, most of the eagles remain undisturbed, favoring the far side of the river, which is where the majority of the proposed Brackendale Eagle Reserve is located. So far, the west bank of the Squamish River remains relatively untouched, except for a few recent heli-logged clear cuts and a hydro line. The area is relatively inaccessible — there are no bridges across the lower part of river or roads on the other side — and the large cottonwoods in which eagles perch hours on end still line the banks.

From Thor's lofty perch on the second floor of his gallery, the west side of river is plainly visible. The eagles have gone for another season to their nesting grounds as far away as Alaska, Arizona and Wisconsin. Little do the eagles know that the work of a few will hopefully keep bringing back thousands of them.

HOROSCOPE

By C.C. Clark - eTVData Features Syndicate

April 28 through May 4, 1996

Aries (March 21 - April 20)

A first impression is important, especially in workplace. A neat appearance and cordial attitude will take you further than you think.

Taurus (April 21 - May 21)

You receive creative inspiration from an unusual source. It isn't easy, but you may have to delegate important tasks to complete a project.

Gemini (May 22 - June 21)

The courage you need is within you, but you have to trust yourself to do what is right. Introspection is good. Examine feelings before acting on them.

Cancer (June 22 - July 23)

Procrastination is your worst enemy and it will get you into trouble every time. Try breaking a project into smaller tasks.

Leo (July 24 - Aug. 23)

Concentrate on what you want to make happen in your life. Your willingness to do what it takes will be noticed by those who matter.

Virgo (Aug. 24 - Sept. 23)

Be fearless when trying to get your ideas across to those who are stubborn. It is imperative you make them understand.

Libra (Sept. 24 - Oct. 23)

Things haven't been so easy lately, but this is about to change. Life will be better than ever and the bad times will be forgotten.

Scorpio (Oct. 24 - Nov. 22)

An idea may turn out to be profitable if presented the right way. A business partnership could be the works.

Sagittarius (Nov. 23 - Dec. 21)

A change of residence is on the horizon and it may be a dream come true. Pinch yourself. It really is happening.

Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)

Keep a clear view of the road ahead and jump over obstacles in your way. Don't let others keep you from doing what you must.

Aquarius (Jan. 21 - Feb. 19)

Jealousy and anger are two very harmful emotions. Find a way to release the tension you feel and not take it out on others.

Pisces (Feb. 20 - March 20)

Your mood is ever-changing. There is a possibility of a new love interest or friendship that could blossom into something special.

Darts & Daffodils

Want to say thanks and make sure everyone knows why? Or maybe offer a little constructive criticism without confrontation? Send your Dart or Daffodil to The Editor, Squamish Chief, Box 3500, Squamish, BC V0N 3G0 or drop it off at our office at 38 Second Avenue, between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. You can also send your message to 892-8483 or e-mail sqchief@mountain-inter.net.

Daffodils of sincere sympathy to Fran Lewis, who lost her sister in February and her brother in April, from all her friends.

A restaurant filled with daffodils to Colin and his courteous, professional staff who prepared and served a delicious buffet supper for our group on April 15. Our guests were also very impressed and will remember you the next time they're in Squamish.

Dinner tables full of daffodils, irises and carnations to Elaine, Joy and helpers who made beautiful flower arrangements for our dinner. They were special — just the way we felt that evening.

Ringette rinks full of daffodils to John Beatty of The Sports Source for your donation and support of our button design contest. Thanks again for your support. Howe Sound Ringette Association.

A coffee cup full of daffodils to the owners and employees of the Silver Spoon for giving me and my friend a great experience for job shadowing. Also, thanks to the customers for being so nice to us.

A hospital bed full of daffodils to Elka and the Red Cross Loan Cupboard. Your equipment made the last three months a lot more comfortable.

Daffodils to Trish at Stylezone for going the extra distance in rectifying my problem. Thanks, from a satisfied customer.

A Zamboni full of daffodils to the following, who helped make the third annual Squamish Hooters Hockey Tournament a resounding success: Barb. Laurel, Jeanette, Rosella and Ron from the leisure centre, Betty and Woody for the delicious meal (what, no owls?), Shabbir at the Sea to Sky Hotel, Jonathan Vanzella and crew for officiating, and the staff at the Squamish Forest District for all the support. The Squamish Hooters Hockey Club.

Darts to the driver who practically drove into me on Friday night near Re/Max. You were totally aware I was in front of you, I was even wearing a reflective vest. How much more obvious could I get? Either you are far sighted and forgot to wear your glasses, or you're just plain blind. Next time when you see me in my safety vest, please stop.

A hot tub full of daffodils to Gavin, who puts the personal touch back into service. He consistently goes above and beyond the call of duty. Gavin — what a great, great guy.

Daffodils to Susan at Super Valu for the 15-minute meat tray for the senior carpet bowling group.

A floor hockey net full of daffodils to Ms. Rourke Mrs. Koynagi for their kind patience and dedication from the Squamish Elementary School floor hockey teams.

Apartments full of daffodils to all my mother's friends for so generously donating housewares to me for my new apartment. Also daffodils to my friends who have given so generously. A special thank you to June, Debra, Sharon, May, Leona, Debbie and Olene for their donations.

Thank you to my mom and dad for letting me live with them all those months. Last but not least, daffodils to Over the Hill mother Kay Wirachowsky for listening to me all those nights, and for just being my friend. And almost forgot one person, my brother Greg, for helping me move and set up. Gail.

Bunches of daffodils to Don and Darlene at Club Pacific and Bob Kusch and staff at the leisure centre, from the Squamish Physiotherapy crew. Your support and cooperation has been much appreciated.

Darts right back at the Sea to Sky corridor dart huckster. Someone so righteous should know not to judge less than he is judged first. It may interest you to know I too share your views.

What I commented on was was good old-fashioned family holiday time, and that's it. I said nothing about religion whatsoever. I am a practising Zen Buddhist with a Jewish father who leads an all-girl Wiccan choir group. Who was it you proclaimed to be so arrogant?

A plate full of daffodils to the customers who had listened to profane language while they were trying to have a peaceful meal a couple of Sundays ago, and a thank you to myself for letting a misunderstanding upset me to that point.

To the customers, remember that there are many other times when your plate has brought happiness, and that one dart does not ruin it forever.

Darts to the person who took the ceramic burger from Mountain Burger House. We know who you are. Shame on you. That was our tip.

A yard and bonfire full of daffodils to the 15 or so teenagers who attended my daughter's birthday party on April 19. You did a great job in following all of the rules, as well as being polite and well behaved. You should all be very proud of yourselves. You're a real cool bunch.

A suitcase full of daffodils to Mindy and the North Vancouver Outdoor School staff for making the senior walking club walk on Thursday so enjoyable. Your hospitality is much appreciated. Thank you.

EDUCATION

Young carvers featured on CBC, Japanese television

There were actually two television teams at Howe Sound Secondary School April 22, interviewing students and photographing them at work. The results of the students' efforts were seen the same evening as part of the news. The other team was working on behalf of Japanese National Television, and their program will be broadcast in Japan. However, they have promised to send the school a copy of the tape.

The chief, some elders and the education team of the Squamish Nation were there to honor the occasion, and lend support to the students working on the friendly figure. The CBC clearly considered the carving of the figure, to stand at the entrance to the new part of the school, a newsworthy undertaking. It will welcome viewers, especially to the community theatre, and symbolize good will amongst all the various people in our community.

Sound Schools

By Constance Rulka

particularly profit from the program. Aaron, who had only a dozen or so words a few months ago, now speaks more than two hundred. The main thing, though, is that he is thrilled with the skills he is acquiring. A voice names the things he sees on the screen — a sweater, boots or mittens — and he can record his own voice talking back. He turns to Ms. Stack, his teaching assistant, and pats her face or hair when he has said the word correctly. Success is clearly the great motivator at all levels of this program and Aaron enjoys it so much that his attention span is growing all the time.

There is a set of 72 books to choose from in this program — in print form, on audio-cassettes or on video in the computer. These are at three levels of difficulty (24 in each set), and the student can begin at the place where he/she is successful and progress from there. The books were clearly chosen to have a wide appeal. They include both fiction and non-fiction and fit the experiences of students from various backgrounds — city, suburban or rural. Illustrations are rich in color and detail. The text follows predictable language patterns and makes use of rhymes, and there is always lively background music to keep up a cheerful pace.

The machine does not replace the teacher, but helps by giving more individualized instruction than the teacher could possibly have time for. With it, the youngsters can pace themselves and it suits their different learning styles. The program also gives the teacher a chance to keep track of what each student has done, and the work can be printed out and put into the student's portfolio. Teachers can also close off certain options and can program in instructions which direct the student's work into the required areas. Students can easily work in pairs, with a stronger reader helping a slower one.

Movie Star

Incidentally, we had a chat with a real live movie star in Grade 3. Matthew Williams has appeared in three films already and is quite nonchalant about this exciting adventure.

Matthew Williams

Author at Mamquam

A rather more experienced author than the ones at Stawamus paid a visit to Mamquam on April 19. The Grade 7 French immersion students were more than glad to leave their regular work and go to the library to hear a talk by a writer from Quebec. Mme Farmer's class had been writing a test in French on the U.S. election process, a topic which is complicated enough at the best of times, and in one's own language (luckily, they are helped by getting a special children's newspaper in French twice a month), so this author was doubly welcome.

Mademoiselle Jasmine Dubée talked about her books with Grade 7 French immersion students at Stawamus Elementary School. Constance Rulka photo

Mademoiselle Jasmine Dubée writes plays and children's books and she wrote the TV script for a series on Passepartout, a program rather like Sesame Street and most popular in Quebec. She also wrote an unusual book for children, dealing with the death of a grandfather, because she feels that adults often make such a sad experience harder for children to bear by not explaining simply what is happening, so that they can understand. Beside her as she talked, Dubée had a rack holding more than 20 of her books. As she picked up each one to talk about it, various students recognized those they had read and she would discuss their opinions (always in French) on the stories.

The students really appreciated it when she drew one of their names from a jar to be the lucky winner of one of her new books. Dubée clearly likes youngsters. She said herself that she learns a lot from them, and thinks of them as equals.

Italians, French love their spinach

Author E. B. White spoke for many when he penned: "I say it's spinach, and I say the hell with it." Especially those forced to endure the drippy canned spinach of Popeye fame. It took a long time for North Americans to learn to treat spinach with respect.

Although it was the Spanish who first brought spinach to North America, there's nothing in Spanish cuisine remotely similar to that childhood nightmare of watery, overcooked greens. Some evil cook intent on torment seized upon its healthy virtues and nothing else. What an indignity for such a venerable vegetable. The Chinese, for whom spinach has been on the menu for at least 1,300 years, stir-fry it only until wilted, with oil and garlic. It's found in Indian and Thai curries. The French, Italians, and even the Scandinavians knew enough to cook spinach with butter, cream or cheese. The fat in these foods is a necessary counterpoint to spinach's nasty tendency to set teeth on edge. At the same time it disguises the delicate but unmistakable taste of dirt.

With such seemingly repulsive qualities (instantly recognized by children), why eat spinach at all? The French compare it poetically to virgin beeswax, since spinach can adapt innocuously to any culinary situation. Herein lies its strength. Popeye simply had no taste.

I'm first in line to buy spring's new crop of baby spinach. Buy crisp-looking bunches with dark green leaves. Fresh spinach is always full of grit and needs a thorough rinsing. To clean it, remove and discard the stems and any wilted or yellowed leaves. Soak the leaves in a sink full of cold water. The grit will fall to the bottom. Change the water and soak one more time. Dry in a salad spinner if it's not cooked right away. Store spinach in a plastic bag in the fridge no more than three days. One pound of raw spinach makes about one cup when cooked.

Italians were so crazy about spinach that Catherine de Medicis took recipes with her to France. In honor of her Italian home town of Florence, "a la Florentine" attached to French dishes meant they were cooked with spinach. It wasn't long before the French became fond of spinach as the Italians. Louis XIV, deprived of spinach by a royal physician, is said to have bellowed, "What! I am the king of France and I cannot eat spinach?" He could and did.

Many Italian dishes are unthinkable without spinach. Adding it to the cheese filling in lasagna not only boosts the food value, but adds good flavor. The following recipe uses a homemade tomato sauce. It takes a bit of time to cook, but is well worth the effort. Fry any excess sauce for other pasta dishes or the next batch of lasagna.

- Lasagna
- 6 lasagna noodles
 - 1 lb. lean ground beef
 - 2 Tbsp. olive oil
 - 1 medium onion, finely diced
 - 2 large cloves garlic, pressed
 - 2 large tins imported plum tomatoes
 - 1 cup tomato sauce
 - 1 small hot, dry chili (optional)
 - 1 1/2 tsp. dried whole basil (or 1 to 2 Tbsp. fresh)
 - 1/2 tsp. thyme
 - 1/2 tsp. dried whole oregano
 - 1 small carton cottage cheese
 - 1 egg
 - 1/3 cup grated Parmesan cheese
 - 1/2 cup cooked spinach (1/2 lb. fresh)
 - 2 to 3 cups grated Mozzarella cheese

Brown the beef. Put it into a large saucepan, draining off any fat. Heat the oil in the skillet. Gently fry the onion and garlic until soft, but not brown. Add to the saucepan. Stir in the tomatoes, sauce and herbs. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer for about an hour, stirring occasionally. The sauce should reduce until it's quite thick. You don't want it soupy or the lasagna will be watery. Season to taste with salt and a few grinds of pepper. Fish out the chili if you can find it. While the sauce is cooking, boil the noodles until soft. Drain and reserve in cold water. Beat the egg into the cottage cheese. Stir in the Parmesan cheese. Squeeze the cooked spinach as dry as possible, then mince finely. Stir in the cottage cheese mixture.

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Spread a thick layer of tomato sauce in the bottom of a 9 by 13 inch baking dish. Top with three lasagna noodles. Spread the cottage cheese mixture over the noodles. Top with three more lasagna noodles. Spread a generous layer of tomato sauce on top. Cover with foil and bake for about 45 minutes. Remove the foil, sprinkle the Mozzarella cheese on top and bake for another 15 minutes, until the lasagna is bubbly and cheese is lightly browned. Remove from oven and let stand for 10 minutes before cutting into the lasagna.

Great luncheon for bowlers

The wind-up banquet for the seniors bowling league was held at the golf club last week. Forty were out for the event. G. Binning, G. Thackeray and Ann Gallant were the big winners for the men, and the women's prizes home were D. Turner, D. Knutsen and D. Knutsen. Consolation prizes of money were given to all members. A special thanks to the golf club for the great luncheon and service.

Some of these seniors will be heading to Burnaby on Monday to compete with seniors from other communities to determine who will represent zone 4 in the B.C. Senior Bowls Championships at Kamloops in September. Good luck to Hazel Armstrong, Dennis Larkin, Joan Hutchinson, Ann Gallant and spare May

Over the Hill By Kay Wirachowsky

On behalf of seniors, I would like to thank the restaurants in town which have been so kind to us. As we get on in our old age, our appetites get smaller. I hate to order a meal and send half of it home. Yes, most of the eateries do supply doggy bags, but some food just isn't the same reheated.

Tantalus Seniors Centre

Open Monday to Friday 1-4 p.m. closed weekends and holidays. Mondays, join the craft ladies for a relaxing afternoon. Work on a project for yourself or someone for the centre. The Tuesday crib club has been having good attendance, with 20 out last week. They need some more players, and if you are interested in the crib club, please phone Ann Gallant at 898-3384. Meetings are at 1 p.m. sharp.

Wednesday morning is the sketch and paint club from 10 a.m. till noon. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons — open for games and cards. The crib club would like to say thanks to Laurane Armstrong who washed all their dishes from the smore board. I guess with all the construction downtown, the water was off for a while.

The Squamish Seniors Wellness Council will be welcoming back Kristine Miles, who will be conducting music therapy sessions from 1:30 p.m.-2:30 p.m. on May 2, 16, 23, 30, and June 6. All seniors are welcome. On April 9, senior carpet bowlers Val Skuman, Peggy Watt, Terry Brock and Dave Watt travelled to False Creek to play in a tournament. They bowled four hours straight (four games). They won one, lost one and had a good day. One gentleman was 97 and a good player. On April 12, nine players went to White Rock for a social game. While there they had a visit from Bill Curren, a former resident of Squamish. Also, Mary Goad's cousin says hello. Thanks to our driver Angela. On April 22 we had a luncheon by 10 people from the Edmonds Centre on the highway. After an informal luncheon we bowled for two hours. One lady was 93 and had a ball. The carpet bowlers would like to thank Carol and the staff of the seniors centre for all their help. If you're interested they can be reached on Mondays at 1 p.m. and Fridays at 1:30 p.m. The cost is $2.14 a game.

Walking Club News

I was sorry I didn't get out with the outdoor walking club last week but 20 did. They enjoyed coffee and scones after. This Thursday, May 2, is a Mamquam walking club. Meet at 10 a.m. at the parking lot by the dog pond for a walk south on the dike. Ted will be leading the walk.

The raffle for the Tantalus Seniors Centre will be drawn at 3 p.m. on May 3 at the centre. Come early for coffee and cake. Prizes are: first — 6x3 hooked wall hanging of a Scottish piper, donated by Jim Lehman; second — one night stay (suite) at the Sea to Sky Hotel donated by Shabbir Dhalla; third prize is a home care package donated by Parm Johal of IDA Pharmacy; fourth prize — gift basket of Avon and Watkins products donated by Mary Carey and Linda QuaiFFE.

Drop in and see our cozy centre. Membership is 50 dollars and up.

Face the corridor's radical rips with new trail guides

By David Donaldson

The cat is finally out of the saddle bag. The long held myth that the best mountain biking in Sea to Sky country can only be found in Whistler will be debunked with the release of three new mountain bike trail guides this summer featuring trails in Squamish, along with other areas in the corridor.

With up to 100,000 mountain bikers from around the globe travelling to the Sea to Sky Corridor for its incomparable riding last summer, the sport is on the cusp of becoming a major tourism draw for the area.

"In Squamish there is an extremely wide range of riding — from big road rides to very difficult technical riding," says Squamish mountain bike enthusiast and Test of Metal organizer Kevin McLane. "Long-forgotten logging roads and railway grades are resurrected to provide Squamish with a unique trail system."

Combined with the Squamish Mountain Bike Festival featuring the Test of Metal race June 15-16, the new trail guides will effectively put Squamish on the mountain bikers' map as a desirable destination for prime technical riding.

The Sea to Sky Mountain Bike Guide will be the first book to hit the shelves May 1. Produced by Radical Multimedia and Marketing in Nelson, B.C., the guide will be geared "towards the visitor population that comes there in the summer," said publisher Bjorn Enga from his office in Nelson. With a high gloss finish and full color photos from top-notch photographers, the 84-page book is designed to be a "kind of a souvenir" visiting cyclists can take home with them.

The Sea to Sky guide features a collection of trails from Whistler, Pemberton, and about 30 from Squamish rated in four levels of difficulty. Because they're "not locals" and don't really know a lot about the riding (here)," Enga and his co-author Derek Westerlund did some consulting with local riders and hired a former Squamish resident to map out the trails and write the ride descriptions, and make sure no unauthorized rides were included.

Enga says Radical went to a lot of effort and expense to provide "fairly detailed maps and wicked photos" for the $9.95 book. He says 50 cents from each sale will go directly to the Sea to Sky Trail Society to help build and maintain the trail.

In conjunction with the release of the guide, a website at www.rideguide.com is being developed on the Whistler Networks server and will contain maps, trail descriptions, photos and downloadable video clips.

Enga is excited about the potential for mountain biking in the Sea to Sky corridor: "The whole area could become the next big mountain bike hype in North America — it could do what Mojave did five years ago."

More hardcore enthusiasts will want to check out Fat Tire Trails in Squamish and Whistler by locals Rob Cocquyt (Squamish) and Dave Kelly (Whistler) coming out in June. Published by McLane's Merlin Productions, Fat Tire Trails promises to be a "milestone" says McLane, with highly detailed descriptions and maps of more than 100 quality trails, many of them unknown except to the serious local riders.

Also featured in the 96-page guide is a history of mountain biking in Squamish by Cliff Miller, Rob's Top Ten Loops, popular race course maps and sample times, and lots of easy to follow maps — all with great photos, quotes and anecdotes and a full color cover.

Cocquyt was compelled to create this guide to ensure the future use of trails in the area. He says concerns of over-use, user conflict and environmental impact threaten the future of the sport unless a more responsible attitude towards such issues is adopted.

Access to all published trails is authorized by the landowners and the land status of all trails is clearly stated in the guide.

One of the best rides featured in Fat Tire Trails isn't as technical as the others, but could prove to be one of the most exciting. The Ring Creek Rip is "destined to become a classic," says Cocquyt. Beginning with a grueling 10-kilometre ride up the Mamquam forest road, the ride quickly turns around into eight kilometres of fast singletrack ending with a tire-blowing 500-metre descent that makes it all worth it.

Another local book from Merlin Productions is High Bikes: A Selected Guide to Mountain Biking in Southwest B.C. written by Greg Maurer and Thomas Vrba.

This guide differs from others in that it offers more road riding with hiking options, rather than technical singletrack rides. It features 75 backcountry rides in regions including the Okanagan, Manning Park, Chilliwack River Valley, Fraser Valley, southern Chilcotin, and the Sea to Sky corridor.

Maurer says the all the rides are "the best of the best" from each region for riders of all skill levels. Many of the Squamish rides featured will be "heavy on scenery and will be perfect for novice riders.

The 224-page book has been in the works for nearly two years, with a lot of time spent making sure all trail accesses are fully authorized. Maurer says that without his partner, it would have taken five years to put out a book with that amount of detailed information.

As a photographer, Maurer wanted to make sure the book doesn't skimp on the photos, so he's made sure there is at least one black and white photo per ride and a full color photo section in the middle.

Each of these guides provides a unique perspective on mountain biking in the corridor for enthusiasts interested in the various types of riding available.

Gardner GM nails fastpitch double header

The Greg Gardner GM Fastball Club led the season with a double header victory over Vancouver's Labatt's club at Manan Park Saturday. Gardner GM took an early 3-1 lead in the first game before Rex Reece hit a two-run homer to double the score and Labatt's out of the game. The game ended with a score of 8-1 with pitcher Doug Allin striking out 11 batters. Gardner GM had a slightly tougher time of it going into the second game as Labatt's put their number one starter on the mound. Gardner GM scored on its first hit when John Stuart singled Allin in the bottom of the first inning, but Labatt's made it 1-0. Labatt's tied the game in the bottom of the first inning, but Gardner GM broke the game wide open in the top of the second, loading the bases with two walks and a single to set up Reece for a grand slam to make the score 5-1.

Allin continued to pitch a good game in the 9-5 victory and put in a strong performance at the plate with a home run. Other strong hitters were James Raymond, Rusty Skiffington, John Stuart and Sean Van Strepin, with a home run. Head coach Al Godin was especially pleased with the team's hitting, which had appeared to be a weak spot earlier. The Greg Gardner Fastball Club goes to Vancouver May 3-5 for the Vancouver Thunderbirds Invitational tournament.

Test of Metal ready to rock

The organization for the Squamish Mountain Bike Festival is nearly complete and riders can start registering for events right away. The action all begins June 15 at the Manan Park Leisure Centre. Following the B.C. Injury Prevention Centre demonstration, the B.C. School Age Trials begin with the Test of Jellybeans for citizen riders aged 7-9 starting at 10 a.m., followed by the Peewee Pounder for peewees and citizens aged 10-12, the Jimmy Masher for minimys and citizens aged 13-14, and the Teenage Test of Metal for juniors and citizens 15-18. The citizen category is for riders age 10 and over who do not have a current racing licence. The other categories are for licensed racers. Saturday's events conclude with the Test of Metal dinner and $2,000 prize draw at the Manan Park Leisure Centre at 5:30 p.m. The prize draw is open to competitors in the School Age Trials and pre-registered entrants in the Test of Metal and Observed Trials Competition. Proceeds from the pasta dinner will go towards trail development programs in the Squamish area. The festival gets rolling again Sunday with the Observed Trials Competition at the leisure centre from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. This event tests the concentration and balance of riders as they manoeuvre their bikes over obstacles of various sizes and shapes. The main attraction of the festival, the 65-kilometre Test of Metal, begins at 12:30 p.m. with most riders expected to finish by 3 p.m. The race will take riders through the best terrain in Squamish, climbing more than 1,200 metres and winding through 35 kilometres of single-track. Entry forms for all the events must be received by June 10 and are available at Corsa Cycles and the Tantalus Bike Shop. For race information call the hotline at 1-604-878-6644.

Harriers track and field club up and running

The Squamish Harriers Track and Field Club is being revived following renewed interest in fitness and exercise in Squamish.

Expert trainers will begin instruction in 10-metre to three-kilometre runs, long jump and triple jump, and will quickly move into other areas such as javelin and discus.

In addition to its association with B.C. Athletics, the Harriers will also have an affiliation with the West Coast Track Club of North and West Vancouver, which will allow for an exchange of coaches and the use of modern facilities for Squamish athletes.

The Harriers will train track and field athletes for competition but the club is open to anyone who just wants to learn to run and train injury-free at whatever level they wish.

Anyone over the age of nine of any athletic ability who wants to keep active and healthy is welcome to join the club.

For more information contact Gary Kel at 892-5839.

After a successful inaugural season with five wins and two losses in the second half, the Squamish Axemen Rugby Football Club is now competing with any team in Vancouver Rugby Union's fourth division.

The Axemen will be entering a second team in the VRU and is looking for players of all experience levels. The team will hold its annual general meeting and election of officers May 1 at 7 p.m. in the office of GBA Logging. For more information call Gord at 892-3900.

The Squamish Rock Boxing Club is opening the doors of its new boxing gym Wednesday May 1. The new facility is located at #6-39818 Progress Way in the Industrial Park.

Tickets are still on sale for the B.C. Golden Gloves tournament May 18-19 at the Howe Sound Secondary School gym. Tickets can be purchased for individual events or the whole weekend from Black Tusk Realty, Sea to Sky Signs, the Squamish Rock Boxing Club or at the door.

Whistler Valley Trail Run set for fifth year

Runners take your mark! The annual Whistler 10/5-kilometre Valley Trail Run is set for its fifth year, challenging local runners to a multi-terrain, figure-eight loop through the village.

Organizer Cheryl Morningstar, with the Whistler Multisport Club, said the May race is expected to draw at least 100 participants this year — even if the current rainy trend continues.

Morningstar said last year the race drew 95 runners under perfect weather conditions, "but the year before there was the most torrential deluge you could imagine and there were still 90 runners," she said. "They're keen...crazy like golfers."

The 10-kilometre run starts in Mountain Square, goes out to Lost Lake and returns to the village. Runners then go around the Whistler Golf Course to complete the figure-eight.

The five-kilometre option, which is suited to casual runners and walkers, will end after the Lost Lake portion.

"The nice thing about this race course is that there is a variety of terrain," Morningstar said. "You have the gravel trail and the paved Valley Trail and some nice rolling sections. There's certainly nothing mundane about it."

Due to the unique course, the annual race even attracts Lower Mainland running clubs.

Last year the Valley Trail run drew competitors ranging in age from seven to 80 years old, including one grandfather-grandson team who completed the five-kilometre course.

Entry this year is $32 per runner and includes a long-sleeved T-shirt, refreshments, awards and draw prizes.

Proceeds from the run help support the Whistler Multisport Club. But this year organizers have also agreed to donate a portion to the new Kidsport program for disadvantaged children. "We'll start getting that name around and have some information (about Kidsport) in the race package," Morningstar said.

Registration forms for the B.C. Road Running-sanctioned event can be picked up at Sportstop and the Meadow Park Sports Centre.

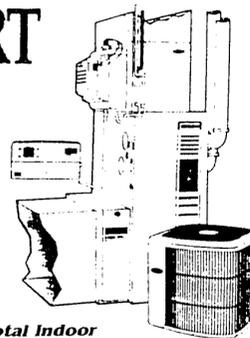

Race time is 9 a.m., with the awards ceremony set for the Delta Whistler Resort at 11 a.m.
