Store staff rejects offer

By Ron Enns

British Columbia Labor Relations Board head mediator Brian Foley has asked the parties involved in a dispute that closed 131 Save-On-Foods, Overwaita and Safeway stores across British Columbia to meet with him to discuss renewing negotiations.

Store employees, who are members of United Food and Commercial Workers' Union local 1518 and local 2000, in a vote last week overwhelmingly rejected the final offer of the companies, Canada Safeway Limited and Overwaita Food Group.

The final offer vote was rejected with 86 per cent of the employees voting against.

Only one such final offer vote is allowed in any set of negotiations.

Provincial Labor Relations Board information officer Clive Lytle said company and union representatives have agreed to meet with Foley, although a date has yet to be set.

The store employees were locked out and the stores closed May 30.

Last week, union locals declared a strike against both companies.

The affected stores, including Save-On-Foods in Squamish, will remain closed.

The companies' primary objective in the final offer was to introduce a new wage scale for new employees, but retain the wage scale for existing employees, Lytle said.

Canada Safeway Ltd. vice-president Toby Oswald in a news release said that the company needs to achieve cost reductions in order to survive in the British Columbia marketplace.

Hospital responds to coroner's report on Enns

Squamish Health Care Society has accepted a report dealing with recommendations made by a coroner's into the death of a Squamish logger. Gerald Caldwell died in April, 1994 after he sustained serious chest injuries when he was struck by a grapple at a log-site in the Mamquam valley east of Squamish.

Caldwell was flown by helicopter to Lions Gate General Hospital where he was stabilized before being transported by road ambulance to Lions Gate Hospital. Five minutes before arriving at Lions Gate Hospital his condition deteriorated and he was pronounced dead when the ambulance arrived at the hospital.

Squamish Health Care Society chief executive officer John Dillabough recently presented to the board a response to the coroner's report. He said the board has indicated it is satisfied that Squamish General Hospital's emergency services have been shown to be appropriate in all respects to the community.

Seven of the jury's 12 recommendations were directed to Squamish General Hospital. Dillabough said the hospital was "severely criticized" in the coroner's report and that "there certainly has been a lot of finger-pointing" during the case.

But he added that during the process of responding to the jury's recommendations it became obvious that Squamish hospital standards are in line with other "peer" hospitals.

"We accept a lot of that (criticism) because we are not a Mayo Clinic, we are not Lions Gate Hospital. But I think we are certainly in a position to match anything that's going on in a similar rural setting."

The recommendations made to Squamish General Hospital and the health care society's responses are:

- That Squamish General Hospital be equipped with a two-way radio — A two-way radio was installed enabling nursing and medical staff to communicate directly with the local ambulance service.

- That the board of directors of Squamish General Hospital review the possibility of hiring a full-time emergency room physician — Full-time coverage would amount to $715,000 a year and funding is not available to implement this initiative.

- That an independent audit of the emergency procedures at Squamish General Hospital be performed as soon as possible. This audit should include hospital staffing levels and trauma protocols — The audit was conducted by an emergency physician and the head nurse of the emergency department of Lions Gate Hospital.

The Squamish hospital is considering recommendations in the audit that a specific trauma protocol be developed for various emergencies and that ambulance attendants can make a "trauma protocol" request so that when possible all members of the "trauma team" are on site in the emergency department prior to the arrival of the patient.

- That written policy and procedures manuals be in place and maintained and that they should include the trauma hot line 1-800 phone number — Policies and procedures manuals are in place and do include the trauma hot line.

- That all emergency physicians at Squamish General Hospital acquire and maintain advanced trauma life support (ATLS) and advanced cardiac life support (ACLS) — A 1982 policy that ACLS be attended by all the medical staff and be repeated every three years has been reaffirmed and extended to include that "ATLS training be taken once."

• That all nurses in an emergency room setting at Squamish General Hospital be current in ACLS and be provided with appropriate additional training in trauma care — Four nurses at the hospital who work in the emergency department have since been certified in ACLS.

Dillabough said the hospital has "accepted the criticism, but we have looked at it with the view that we must be able to learn something from this. I think we have. We have some of the protocols in place. It hasn't done any harm in my estimation."

As well, he added that as a result of the findings of the inquest, the Ministry of Health has struck a committee to look at 17 "peer facilities" to come up with a report about standards of performance for consistency throughout the province.

"We will be judged against our peers and if we're the odd man out, then certainly we are going to be criticized."

Bruusgaard named LMMA president

After six years as a director, second-vice-president and first vice-president, Tom Bruusgaard is now president of the Lower Mainland Municipal Association.

Bruusgaard, a municipal councillor in Squamish, was elected to a one-year term at the association's recent annual general meeting.

He said the association is important for the region, which extends from Lillooet to throughout the Lower Mainland, because it allows Lower Mainland municipalities to function as a regional lobby group, speaking with one voice when necessary.

Bruusgaard is very active in the Squamish community.

He is past-president and a director of the Soo Coalition for Sustainable Forests Society, president of the Tantalus Seniors' Centre, Trans Canada harbor master for Squamish and is a partner in a company recently building a granite processing plant in the industrial park.

Peace runners travel through corridor

By Sheila Keenan

It's like running two to three marathons a day.

But the people taking part in Peace and Dignity Journeys, a run from Alaska to Mexico, aren't doing it for the exercise.

"It's appropriate that the wording is 'journey.' It's not just a run," said one runner from Hazelton, B.C.

While the run is organized by Native American groups to raise awareness of all indigenous peoples on the hemisphere, anyone who supports the cause can participate.

The runners, who left Alaska at the beginning of May and have been travelling up to 131 kilometres a day, reached Mount Currie last Tuesday night and left the next morning for Squamish.

Horse Dolan, a participant from Arizona, said people have a lot of reasons for taking part.

He said there's an element of spirituality to the run, as well as self and cultural awareness-raising going on.

"We're creating a chain of communication," said Dolan.

Another group of runners started from South America with the plan being for both groups to meet in Teotihuacan, Mexico on Oct. 12. Teotihuacan, located near Mexico City, is the site of an ancient Aztec city and two massive, pyramid-shaped temples to the sun and moon.

North American co-ordinator Gustavo Gutierrez said the runners have had some wonderful experiences along the route. While the group has notified most of the Indian bands along the way that they are coming, the group has passed through some communities where no one expected them.

The run is self-supporting and while they take donations of food, money and services, they have no large corporate sponsors.

"The people who feed us, those are our sponsors," said Gutierrez with a laugh. Early on the run, the group was in Whitehorse and it was starting to snow. Gutierrez said he was starting to worry about what would put the runners for the night. He and a child on the road were the pollutaelder and she showed the way to a house. "Pretty soon the shows up and his 4-21 (inhalation) shows up." The 16-18 (inhalation) ended up getting 25 good. 26- for the night and 27- ailments they expected to carry poor, such themselves, Gutierrez all kinds of brought food over them.

Gutierrez said the run is part of a consciousness-raising of indigenous peoples throughout the world. "It is an awakening. see it all through the continent."

A similar run took place in 1992 and Gutierrez said another would be held for 2000.

Dr. Rolph Davis to address council

A noted ornithologist will make a presentation to council today (Tuesday) about the hazards associated with aircraft and birds.

Dr. Rolph Davis of Ontario has conducted numerous studies and environmental impact assessments throughout North America of bird hazards to aircraft and is now looking specifically at the Squamish municipal airport in Brackendale, which is adjacent to the world's largest gathering of bald eagles every winter.

Davis will be making a presentation to council's committee of the whole at 6 p.m. in the council chamber in Municipal Hall.

The meeting is open to the public.

Also this evening, at 8 p.m., Davis will be the guest of honor at an open house at the Brackendale Art Gallery, which is open to a company everyone.

The West Coast Environmental Law Association is funding Davis's trip to speak in Squamish.

SOCAN not behind proposal

Last week's council briefs indicated that the Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers proposed an increase in fees currently paid to authors and composers to include payments to recording artists and recording companies. Bruce Wilde, a spokesperson for SOCAN, however, says that organization is not behind the proposal.

Amendments to Canada's Copyright Act were tabled April 25 in the House of Commons. Among the proposed measures are rights which will provide royalties to producers and performers of sound recordings, a levy on recordable, blank audio media, provisions to give exclusive distributors of books in Canada greater protection in the Canadian market and exceptions from copyright laws for groups such as non-profit educational institutions, libraries, archives and museums as well as people with perceptual disabilities.

Slide site work could last throughout the summer

By Andy Stonehouse

Drivers learning to deal with the frequent delays and travelling constraints created by clean-up work at the Cheakamus River slide site on Hwy. 99 have some good news and bad news for the rest of the summer.

The Ministry of Transportation and Highways has begun work to permanently realign the highway around the massive rockslide, but commuters and weekend travellers should expect further delays well into August.

Dave Swales, area manager for Squamish's highway operations, says that work to shear off any further dangerous rock structure above the slide site has been completed, and that crews are currently drilling drain holes in the rock face to help prevent further slides.

"Everything that's going to be brought down is down already," Swales says. "We will now be blasting the bigger rocks on the road and the end product will have a large protective berm."

Swales says plans are to build an entirely new three-lane road surface to the west of the slide site, and says work to create a new road bed will probably take two months.

Swales is adamant that work be carried out at a safe pace, and says the pressures to keep the road open for travellers will be dealt with accordingly.

"I will not be shamed or dared into opening the road before we have to. I will not have that pressure override safety."

As a result, he says scheduled highway openings, from the top of the hour until 15 minutes after, 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday, will continue, with further 45 minute delays possible at any time.

"We've modified the delay schedule, and decided to shut down at 4 p.m. on Fridays as a compromise, but people should be warned that we could have to work on Saturdays because of it. I don't want this project to tear all the way into winter like Powerline Hill did."

Swales says paving of the realigned highway can be somewhat more economically arranged as it will coincide with a new top coat on the Powerline Hill realignment, completed as the snow first fell late last year.

Jaques Dupas, district engineer for highways, says plans to realign the highway should produce an equally driveable stretch upon completion, but says the slide has created some unique problems for roadbuilders.

"We had certain design constraints," Dupas says.

I will not be shamed or dared into opening the road before we have to. I will not have that pressure override safety.

— Dave Swales

"B.C. Hydro has concerns on the rail-road track side of the river, but the biggest obstacle was the permits from the provincial fish and wildlife and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans."

Dupas says that while roadbuilding materials will push closer to the edge of the environmentally sensitive Cheakamus River, a set of rock walls will protect the river's flow and no damage will be done.

"There's a natural course of the stream and a large boulder bank, and we're only pushing out onto that. Along the portion where fisheries wouldn't let us build, we're putting in an 80 metre-long, five metre-high retaining wall," he said.

"Plus the bottom portion will consist of large boulders that's ideal rip-rap material, and no flood could wash that out."

Glen Carlson, regional habitat biologist with the Ministry of Environment's fish and wildlife division, says the project has been given a faster-than-normal approval because of the sudden nature of the slide, but says the correct precautions will be taken.

"Highways has been given emergency go-ahead, but they will have to make sure they ensure the water quality," Carlson says.

"They will have to create additional resting areas along the river for the resident rainbow trout, although we don't believe the area was actually an active spawning region."

Dupas says plans are to crush about half of the 50,000 cubic metres of rock in the slide area and shift it to the west, creating a new road bed, and then use the remaining rock to create a 10 metre-high protective berm on top of the existing highway path.

"The new highway will be completely adjacent to the current highway, and it will tie in at the hydro tower at the south end of the site and the pull-out at the north end of the site."

Dupas says engineers will also be trying to straighten out the entire salt shed to canyon passing section, reducing the existing three curves to two.

He also says the ministry decided that a diversion project was a simpler solution than attempting to shear off any further overhanging rock.

"It is cheaper for us to realign the entire highway than to bring down the entire rock mass. To do that, you'd have to build access roads and there would be an incredible volume of rock, and at the end you'd still be left with a sense of unknown — once I bring down that rock mass, what happens behind it?"

Dupas chalks the experience up to part of the on-going troubles surrounding road-building in mountainous B.C.

Lockout good for some businesses

By Ron Enns

The lockout of Save-On-Foods employees and temporary closure of Squamish's largest grocery store has overall not negatively affected neighboring businesses in the mall Save-On-Foods anchors.

When Chieftain Centre merchants' association chairwoman Trish James initially was told about the lockout, which began May 30, she said she was afraid of a potential negative impact on business in the mall.

But to the contrary, some stores have had an increase in business and others, while down a bit, have not been hit as hard as she expected.

"I have phoned everybody to see how they are doing and consensus is everyone seems to be doing good or even better," she said, noting however that a couple of businesses have been affected negatively.

At Stylezone, which is owned by James, business was down six per cent for the first 13 days of June.

"I would say my weekdays are very strong and my weekends are a tad lighter. Overall, I can't say it's had a huge impact."

She said she has noticed a decrease in pedestrian traffic at the mall.

At Shoppers Drug Mart, business has increased substantially since the Save-On-Foods lockout.

Dwayne Schmidt, Shoppers Drug Mart merchandise manager, last week said business is at up "at least 25 per cent."

There has been a noticeable increase in sales, particularly in confection items and health and beauty aids, he said.

In Chieftain Centre generally, Schmidt said it appears to be busy. "We are stuck in here because we are swamped. These are good times for us," he said, adding that the circumstances, however, are unfortunate.

"Overall, I can't say it's had a huge impact."

Raj Kahlon, owner of True Value Hardware, said his store is quite busy as well. Garden tools, items which were being sold at Save-On-Foods, are moving well at True Value Hardware.

Both Timber Foods and Super-Valu grocery stores have reported a huge increase in business.

Robert Fine, Sea to Sky economic development officer, said that an interesting question is whether or not the lockout reduces overall expenditures in Squamish, which is not known.

Fine said "people need to buy groceries obviously," but wondered if people are staying with the basics and not buying more exotic items in Squamish because they know they will be paying more.

A 1990 study showed that there was $5 million in leakage from the Sea to Sky Corridor residents shopping for consumer goods, including the groceries.

"What does a strike like this do? Are people going to shop elsewhere for those lower prices and drive to the city to shop at stores like the Club, Costco or the Real Canadian Superstore?" Fine questioned.

When asked about whether or not Squamish needs another major grocery store — a question that has been raised with the building of the Squamish Station, which was anchored by an IGA Plus store in 1981 — a proposal for the Garibaldi Shopping Centre, which is anchored by an Extra Foods store, Fine laughingly replied: "When we have a strike, yes, in a strike situation for sure."

Helipad proposal presented by AStar

By Ron Enns

Patients who are flown by helicopter into or out of both Squamish General Hospital and Whistler Health Care Centre can be wheeled on a stretcher between the helipad and emergency room in a matter of seconds.

But flying patients to Lions Gate Hospital, the nearest large hospital to the Sea to Sky Corridor, is not usually an option because the hospital does not have a helipad and is no longer considered a trauma centre.

Stephen Mullins, president of AStar Technology Inc., a helipad consulting company, says that Lions Gate Hospital desperately needs a site to land life-saving medivac helicopters.

With the North Shore Health Board saying there are no plans or funds for the construction of a helipad for Lions Gate Hospital, Mullins is proposing to build a helipad facility on the waterfront east of Lonsdale, about a four-minute drive from Lions Gate Hospital.

On Monday, Mullins presented his proposal for a licenced community helipad — to be funded by AStar Technology, which will recover costs with landing fees — to the City of North Vancouver council.

The results of that proposal could not be reported, however, as the meeting happened after the Chief's press deadline.

The helipad Mullins is proposing would cost between $50,000 and $100,000. A helipad on the roof of Lions Gate Hospital would cost between $500,000 and $750,000, he said.

There is no licenced emergency or community helipad anywhere on the North Shore. In the past, helicopters transporting patients to Lions Gate Hospital have landed in Boulevard Park, about a four-minute drive from the hospital.

However, helicopters are no longer allowed to land at the park or at the now closed helipad on B.C. Rail property.

Vancouver General Hospital, which has a helipad on its roof, is the nearest trauma centre to the Sea to Sky Corridor.

Ted Nebbeling, newly elected West Vancouver-Garibaldi MLA and mayor of Whistler, said that he believes the recent Ministry of Health decision to downgrade Lions Gate Hospital — the reason was hit. why it does not need a helipad and designate Vancouver General Hospital as the trauma centre for the North Shore and areas beyond is "incredibly risky" because of the delays that may be encountered in getting to cross the bridges from the North Shore to Vancouver.

He said he would be asking for opinions about the decision to build a helipad at Lions Gate Hospital.

A letter from Squamish Health Care Society chief executive John Dillabough to Mullins was "the practicality of locating a front helipad for emergency medical services is questionable" because of the additional and unnecessary handling of patients, who would have to be taken by road ambulance off the helipad to Lions Gate Hospital.

"A more practical arrangement would be to locate a helipad on or at Lions Gate Hospital," he said. "It also provides a way for the helipad to be easily located on the roof of acute tower, where it is already elevator access."

Mullins said a Lions Gate Helipad could easily be located on the roof of acute tower, where it is already elevator access.

Local men injured in crash

Patricia Wheeler

Two Squamish men are recovering from injuries sustained when their vehicle was hit near a shoe store by a vehicle fleeing police. The parents of the two year-old men are upset with the accident happened and say police involved are partly to blame for their sons' injuries.

We're just very lucky neither of them sustained more serious injuries," said Arlie Mackinnon, whose son was a passenger in a 1981 Ford Mustang when it was hit.

Both men were wearing seat belts when their vehicle was hit.

The accident happened about 1 a.m. May 22 when Cates and Mackinnon were returning to Squamish from Vancouver.

Their vehicle was pulled over by West Vancouver police on the Trans Canada Highway at the intersection to Hwy. 99.

According to Arlie, the men were not given any explanation as to why they were being pulled over.

They saw the West Vancouver police car with lights flashing. They were stopped and told to get off the car and pull over the road," she said.

They were not given any explanation.

A second vehicle also pulled off the highway.

Shortly after that, the Mustang that Josh and Todd were still sitting in, was hit from behind by a 1974 Mercury, which was being pursued by North Vancouver RCMP. The impact of the collision propelled the Mustang into the air and into an unoccupied West Vancouver police cruiser.

The driver in the fleeing car suffered a broken hand in the collision.

The chase began in North Vancouver and went along the Trans Canada Highway into West Vancouver where police from that area were called in to assist.

Const. Paul Skelton, with West Vancouver police, said the vehicles were pulled over as a safety measure.

with Arlie Mackinnon. "You always hear of it happening to other people's children," she said. "An accident like this shouldn't happen."

Both Arlie and Josh's mother, Barb Cates, agree the police are partly at fault for pulling the Mustang off the road where it could be hit by the oncoming vehicle. Both families say they are considering legal action against parties involved.

Steve Gray, of North Vancouver, was charged with breaching a recognition and dangerous driving in connection with the incident.

All three vehicles involved in the accident received extensive damage.

LETTERS

Truth needs to be told

Editor,

I am writing in support of the airport. I do not believe it is unsafe for either eagles or aircraft and I make that decision based on the following.

A year ago on May 3, 1995, Mr. Dave Dunbar, a wildlife biologist with the Ministry of Environment attended an airport committee meeting.

He had been invited to attend because concerns had been expressed about the eagles and the committee wanted to have an "official" opinion before proceeding any further.

If I remember correctly, the gist of what Mr. Dunbar said was that there had already been several studies done on eagles and aircraft and that his department was not concerned about the Squamish airport.

They know of several airports where eagles choose to live, Comox being one of them. When questioned about safety he said that if he had a concern it would be that eagles have no natural predators and show no fear of aircraft.

He said his concern was not with the airport but instead with people and eagles. It seems that eagles don't mix with people and that his department was monitoring the river because they were very concerned that the eagles were moving across the river to get away from the people and that the birds were not able to eat.

On November 27, 1995, Mr. Kirk Davis from the Nature Conservancy was the guest speaker at the chamber of commerce monthly meeting.

He explained the history of the Nature Conservancy, how they became interested in Squamish, how they had contracted two biologists to study the area and explained the process of raising funds to purchase property.

All of this is documented in the December 5, 1995 issue of the Squamish Chief except for one glaring omission — lengthy discussion regarding the airport.

Mr. Davis said that they did not feel there was a conflict or that the eagles were threatened and it was then that the biologists were introduced and they spoke about their study of the area and that they had seen on the rivers.

When questioned specifically about aircraft, the biologists stated that a concern might possibly be a bird/aircraft collision. I have no idea why a subject which has grown to be so controversial would be completely omitted from a newspaper article, only the writer knows that. I was biased but I would rather suggest selection.

Election can't come soon enough

Editor,

For two years and five months Brackendale taxpayers (the vocal minority) have been opposing the airport expansion, the OCP amendment.

For 29 months we (the vocal minority) have gathered valuable environmental information which we presented to our elected representatives in order to give the council a chance to study, in depth, what they "feel they must do" for our benefit.

Twenty nine months of presenting our objections to an OCP amendment to a council and a mayor who sat as carved in stone, who now want us to sit back and give them a chance.

The mayor frequently uses the "silent majority," as a reason for the OCP amendment which will expand the use of small town airport.

Twenty nine months of letters opposing the expansion has produced four letters in our local paper from the "silent majority" reporting. I went to all the airport meetings and I wondered at times what airport some people were talking about because it certainly wasn't our airport. After the last public meeting I was concerned about the information I was listening to regarding bird strikes because it was obviously scaring the audience.

I knew the statistics may be true but that they didn't apply to our airport (we won't ever have 352 bombers, CF18s, or any aircraft that flies at 400 m/ph). The next day I phoned Transport Canada and found the man in charge of birds and aircraft. The gentleman I spoke to was very familiar with the Squamish airport. In fact, last winter he made a special trip here to check out the eagles and the airport.

I asked him how the stats I heard applied to our airport and he said they don't. He said slow moving aircraft rarely have bird strikes and that he felt the eagles posed no threat to safety.

He also had a lot of interesting information about birds and airports and how they handle birds.

He said they no longer shoot birds and have found that birds will live on the airport quite happily and they are left alone. That would make an interesting newspaper article.

On a CBC show a Brackendale resident who opposes the airport was describing the proposed expansion and stated that one of the changes was to widen the runway.

I don't recall that ever being discussed at airport committee meetings. In fact the committee was adamant about not altering the runway because it limits the size of the aircraft which land here.

What has been sadly missing is the truth. Perhaps the airport committee and the municipality should have worked with the media to keep the public informed. Those opposing development have manipulated the truth, circulating completely false information and scaring people half to death. I believe people deserve the truth. There is so much incorrect or distorted information circulating that I think the newspaper would be doing a great service to the community by seeking out the truth and printing the facts, all the facts.

The airport was built by the people of Squamish 25 years ago when there were few people living in Brackendale.

The history is well documented and clearly describes the intention for commercial development from the time it was built.

An evolution of the traditional ways in the woods

By Ron Enns

The town of Squamish is starting to get used to transition. Sightseeing tourists and outdoor adventure seekers are streaming into the community like never before.

Once a town that was almost solely dependent on the forest industry, its economy is on the upswing, even though forestry is on a downturn. But north of Squamish, deep in the woods, one would not suspect anything has changed.

In the heart of logging country — International Forest Product's tree farm licence 38 — explosives rip through rock as new roads are built, buzzing chainsaws carve through old-growth fir and cedar, grapple yarders clank as they pull the felled giants to a landing where roaring logging trucks haul the timber to tidewater.

On the surface, it's work as usual, not too different from the days when the provincial government in 1961 delineated tree farm licence 38. However, more than three decades later, now in an era of environmental consciousness, a time when it is realized our natural resources are not unlimited, a closer look at the activities in TFL 38 will reveal significant changes. In fact, even in the past two years the change in the way of working in the woods is substantial.

Superficially, one would now be hard-pressed to find old, rusting cables growing amongst seedlings on newly logged cut blocks. Litter — lunch wrappers, drink cans and oil cans — used to be scattered around work sites, but is now non-existent.

More importantly is the change in how land in the entire tree farm licence is managed. The finiteness of the resource is being truly realized. A new emphasis on less site degradation from road building, on using the resource to its fullest potential and on taking into account fish and wildlife values is evident.

To be certain, some of the loggers of past glory days treated the environment with little respect, and those who have been in the business for the past few decades do attest to the rampant disregard — knowingly and unknowingly — of loggers of yesteryear for their surroundings. But today the attitude of fallers, road builders, industry management and the provincial Ministry of Forests, is one of being responsible and upholding good stewardship.

Juxtaposed by his red Empire Logging suspenders holding up his jeans and leather attaché case dangling from his arm, Pete Bukowsky — road foreman for Interfor's Empire Logging division, which manages TFL 38 — proudly shows off recent road building design near the Elaho River about 70 kilometres north of Squamish.

The road crosses Shadow Creek just above some fish habitat and cuts through an area of unstable slopes. When the road was originally built in the 1970s, a bulldozer plowed its way through. There is still evidence of rocks and trees that were in the way being tossed aside down the bank of the Elaho River, which was common practice at that time.

Heavy rains and runoff washed sediment from the unstable slope right into the creek and river helping to wipe out salmon spawning habitat.

With the design of the new road, washouts from the unstable slope are highly unlikely. Below the slope on the uphill side of the road a French drain has been installed. The French drain is a deeply dug ditch which is filled with large boulders. Near the top of the layers of boulders is geotextile, a material that is water permeable but impervious to sedimentary material. Water percolates through the geotextile and through the layers of boulders and flows toward a culvert running under the road to provide unimpeded drainage in all types of weather.

As well, the stability of the slope has been increased by the seeding of grass. The road is now unsuceptible to washouts and fish habitat is protected. If a catastrophic event does occur, only a thin layer of gravel on top of a roadbed of large boulders would be washed away.

Travelling along the road is further visual evidence of change. Where clear cuts once were the norm without exception, selective logging is slowly taking root. A little less than half of a 22-hectare cut block has still standing on it about one quarter of trees that were there before it was logged.

Trees of every species and size class, as well as some wildlife trees — for example, dead snags that are important to insects or trees that have evidence of a lot of use by birds like woodpeckers — have been left in place.

The selective logging was done as required by the Squamish Forest District, which has decreed that each company must log 10 per cent of its cut blocks in the district using harvesting methods that are an alternative to clear cutting. The edict was made partly as a result of public pressure on the Forests Ministry for less clear cutting and more selective logging, but in this case it also make sense for the specific site.

"It's a dry site so residual trees will assist in nurturing seedlings by providing some shade," said Gord Prescott, planning forester for Empire Logging. As well, the selection logging addresses visual quality objectives with the public using the area for recreation. And as the seedlings that will be planted on the cut block grow, eventually some of the trees left standing in this round of selection logging will mills in the B.C. interior are already designed to handle smaller trees. (The size of the year-old trees in the area are about the same size as an average 100-year-old tree growing in the interior.)

Another new development is the use of helicopters to haul trees off cut blocks, for the core negating the need for road building. Interfor's Helifor division, using one of its two massive Boeing Vertol helicopters, was part of an operation in which a 24-hectare cut block was logged. The cut block is adjacent to roads where there has been recent logging; however, the deep gorge of Shovel Creek separates the two. In the three old days, road builders would have just carried on and crossed the stream, undoubtedly causing sedimentation to occur and increasing the risk of a major slide. But by using helicopters to access the cut block and haul the logs out two or three at a time to a nearby landing on an existing road and because the

be harvested selectively.

So far, only old-growth trees have been logged in TFL 38, but within five years the first second-growth forest will be coming on line for harvesting. Trees that were planted 33 years ago near the Squamish River, about 50 kilometres north of Squamish, are ready for commercial thinning.

Juvenile spacing occurred in the area in 1982, reducing the density of the forest to about 700 trees per hectare. In the process of commercial thinning, about 20 per cent of the standing Douglas fir with some cedar trees will be selectively logged, which will allow the remaining trees to grow faster and better. If commercial thinning did not occur, some of the trees would die off eventually on their own. Commercial thinning will become more popular on the West Coast as saw mills adapt their equipment to handle the smaller trees, Prescott said. Saw are no water courses on the logging cut block, sediment was minimized. It is not like with today's standards that the area would have been allowed to be logged conventionally. Another cut block in TFL 38 will be heli-logged later this year.

Clear cuts continue to be made in the B.C. interior, but the rate of change is slow. Conditions are expected that there will be resistance to changes from people who have been in the business for a length of time. The new forest practices code is imposing many of the changes, but the attitudes of the workers in the woods could be the most noticeable change. The rapid change in the mentality of the past, said Alex Miller, who disappeared along with the abundance of old-growth timber. There is a realization that practices must continue to evolve. Prescott's statement that "we want to see the forest here for the long-term" is a goal that remains true.

District to see budget increase

By Rahoul Ghose

The Howe Sound school district will see a 2.02 per cent increase in spending for the coming 1996/97 school year with more funds budgeted for instruction, district and school-based administration, two major areas. Funding allotted for administration will see the highest percentage increase, a cut block of 5.7 per cent, with the total amount spent, block is about $2.44 million, increasing $131,523 over last year. However the amount spent on administrative officer salaries has actually gone down three per cent or about $57,000 to $1.82 million, reflecting the loss of a district principal position in the board position for career preparation, vacant for some time, has now been eliminated with about a third of the salary going directly to the district's four high schools.

A $10,000 saving is also anticipated from the reduction of the nine-member board of trustees to a body of seven representatives come election time in November. Per-trustee expenses, including those for travel, average about $5,000 per year. The largest monetary increase for next year will be seen in instruction with the final allotment rising $431,032, or 2.26 per cent over this year, to $19.5 million. That increase includes a 5.87 per cent increase in the amount spent on teachers salaries, which rose $677,368 to $12.2 million, and a 5.64 per cent increase in the amount spent on employee benefits and allowances, which rose $192,245 to $3.6 million.

District superintendent Doug Courtice said most of that increase is due to the addition of seven full-time equivalent teaching positions in the district which is expected to support about 4,500 students come September.

"This year's budget is designed to, as best as possible, meet the needs of children and we've tried to keep dollars to the classroom intact," Courtice said.

"But it's unfortunate that the funding we received from the Ministry of Education wasn't equal to what we got last year on a per pupil basis. It was roughly $20 per student less and that makes it very difficult to maintain services in the district." Despite the staffing increases, classes in the district are still expected to hit the maximum size allowed under the collective agreement with teachers. Decreases in 1996/97 will be seen in the amount spent on support salaries, substitute salaries and services and supplies.

The support salary allotment drops about three per cent, or about $143,000, to $4.67 million; the substitute salary amount will see a seven per cent decrease of $59,593 to $776,190; and services and supplies funding will go down 3.26 per cent, or $97,411, to $2.89 million.

Funding for transportation and housing has also gone down 7.85 per cent, or $57,521, to $675,183, a cut which includes the elimination of funding for school crossing guards in the district.

The operations and maintenance budget will see a minor .24 per cent increase next year with the $3.3-million allotment rising $8,060.

The district's overall operating budget for 1996/97 totals $33.2 million with operating expenditures totaling just under $26 million and $6.76 million budgeted for debt servicing.

Teachers ratify deal

By Rahoul Ghose

B.C.'s 42,000 teachers have overwhelmingly ratified an agreement-in-committee with the province which promises a total wage increase of two per cent over the next two years.

In a vote which spanned teachers' not like meetings in every school district in the province, 88.7 per cent of teachers supported the agreement which includes a salary adjustment for the lowest paid TFL 38 and predominantly female category of teachers effective April 1, 1997 and a $10-million incentive fund to be set up in 1998 to assist in the early retirement of teachers.

Conditions under the current collective agreements in the province's 75 school districts would also be maintained, unless they have been modified through provincial or local bargaining.

Locally, the Howe Sound school district's 300-plus teachers voted almost 95 per cent in favor of the agreement, Howe Sound Teachers' Association president Alex Miller said.

Miller, who supported the ratification himself, said he was pleased with the high level of support the agreement received from teachers.

"We want a couple of years of stability in education as it's been pretty chaotic over the past few years," he said.

Teachers have been without a contract for two years and have been negotiating with the province for more than eight months.

If ratified by the province's school boards this week, the new provincial agreement will be in effect until June 30, 1998 with a bridging provision to maintain conditions until a new agreement is negotiated.

However, several boards in the province including those in Vancouver and New Westminster, have publicly opposed the contract.

"I don't know how much of that is hot air," Miller said. "But I think it would be political suicide, with the trustees going to election in November, that they would be the ones to disrupt education."

Miller said both the trustees' bargaining committee and the B.C. Public School Employers' Association chairman have urged trustees to support the new contract. Miller added if trustees don't ratify the agreement, the provincial government is expected to step in and impose a deal.

With the reelection of the NDP government last month, Miller said he is certain if the deal isn't ratified it will be imposed using Bill 21, the same legislation used during the election to stop a work disruption in the Surrey school district.

Under the Education and Health Collective Bargaining Assistance Act, due to run out June 30, the government has already imposed settlements in two public sector disputes.

Cyclist, car collide

A 24-year-old West Vancouver man sustained bruises and abrasions in a collision with a motor vehicle at the corner of Garibaldi Way and Tantalus Road. Police said a 45-year-old California man driving the vehicle failed to yield the right of way to the cyclist.

No charges were laid. There was under $1,000 damage to each the bicycle and the vehicle.

Nineteen grams of cocaine, 5.3 grams of hash oil, drug paraphernalia as well as cameras and chain saws that had been stolen from Squamish residences were found June 11 by police who had obtained a warrant to search a Chiefview Road residence in Hospital Hill. Charges against a 21-year-old man are pending.

Two men in a Chevrolet four-wheel drive pick-up truck evaded police after a Lions Bay resident discovered a break-in in progress at a neighbor's house June 10. Squamish RCMP and West Vancouver police were notified. The pick-up truck was observed driving south on Hwy. 99 at speeds of between 100 km/h and 120 km/h. The licence plate of the vehicle was recorded and traced to a vehicle that had been stolen from Coquitlam the same day. A window was broken at the Lions Bay residence, but nothing had been stolen. Police continue the investigation.

A Nissan Pulsar that was left at the Cliffside Pub parking lot the night of June 5 was stolen and later discovered over the bank about one kilometre up the road to Cat Lake.

Ay started his RCMP auxiliary constable on June 7 discovered the stolen car, which was following a Squamish man decided to track it back to Squamish.

A 27-year-old Coquitlam man has been charged with five driving offences after a car travelling at a high rate of speed went by an RCMP member and auxiliary constable who were dealing with another matter at Valleycliffe June 8 at about 4 a.m.

The RCMP members, who were not in their vehicle at the time, could not go up to the speeding car, which had already gone through a four-way stop sign, they did locate the car and driver about half an hour later.

A motorcycle parked at Mile 16.5 of Squamish Valley Road — at the gate to Butterfly Lake — was stolen between 4 p.m. and 7 p.m. A Squamish man left his green and white Kawasaki KLR650 (B.C. licence number M1952) when he returned from Butterfly Lake the motorcycle was gone.

SEP to get funds

By Ron Enns

The District of Squamish will receive a grant of $3,190 from the federal government's Joint Emergency Preparedness Program (JEPP) and will contribute an equal amount to purchase an emergency generator for the Squamish Emergency Program (SEP).

The 5,000-watt generator will allow the Squamish Emergency Program to operate more efficiently during extended incidents and in remote areas.

The generator will accompany the SEP command vehicle and will be used to keep two-way radio batteries charged, power a photocopier and a heater and provide lighting, said District of Squamish emergency co-ordinator Jim Lang.

An example of an incident where the generator would have been an asset was at the search this past spring for a boy in the Rubble Creek area.

The large-scale search lasted several days, during which radio batteries needed to be recharged and updated information and copies of maps had to be distributed to people involved in the operation.

tion and copies of maps had to be distributed to people involved in the operation.

As well, a new lighting system on the command vehicle will allow it to assist other agencies at night when extra lighting is needed, like at highway incidents.

Two years ago, the District of Squamish received JEPP funding that was used to purchase a jet boat for SEP which has been used for rescues on rivers and Howe Sound.

B.C. Attorney General Ujjal Dosanjh said the announcement of the funding was "a timely reminder of the importance of the federal and provincial governments continuing to cooperate and to support the efforts of communities to prepare and to cope with virtually any type of emergency that may arise."

The Joint Emergency Preparedness Program enables the federal government, which has committed $524,590, to undertake jointly with the provinces and territories projects to ensure a reasonable level of emergency preparedness and response across the country.

Rescue team kept busy

A 15-year-old Squamish girl who spent the night in the bush is safe after being found and rescued.

The girl had wandered down Bluebird Road on Wednesday evening and got lost in a heavily wooded area south of Depot Road on the east side of Hwy. 99.

She was unable to walk out due to an injured ankle and a loss of circulation in her feet.

On Thursday at about 5:20 a.m. a Wenda Place resident heard the girl screaming for help.

The screams were coming from an area northeast of his residence in a dense bush area. Squamish RCMP, Squamish Search and Rescue and B.C. Ambulance Service members located the girl about one kilometre into the bush and took her out on a stretcher.

And midday Saturday, search and rescue and ambulance service members took out on a stretcher a man who had broken his leg while hiking along Ashcroft Creek.

Squamish Search and Rescue responded to two incidents the afternoon of June 8.

Using its jet boat, search and rescue members rescued a hypothermic surfer who was stranded in Howe Sound.

A few hours later, search and rescue and ambulance service members took out by stretcher a woman who had injured her ankle on the trail on the back side of the Stawamus Chief.

"I don't blame him," said Little.

Now behind the wheel of a cab, he took off southbound, driving at speeds between 130 to 140 kilometres per hour toward the Cheakamus rock slide site.

"The flag girl had to jump out of the way."

— Cpl. Darryl Little

According to Squamish RCMP Cpl. Laseur, the vehicle was reported to be driving erratically along Highway 99 in the Brew Creek Lodge area.

Whistler's Const. Don MacGibbon responded but the cab "blew through the road closure at about 60 kmp/h," says Cpl. Little.

"The flag girl had to jump out of the way. He knew the flag girl and even named her in the statement," says Little. "He says he wasn't trying to hit her." According to Cpl. Little, oncoming traffic had been stopped on the south side of the slide and people in the area had to jump out of the way.

Squamish RCMP picked up the chase on the other side of the slide. Two vehicles pursued the cab. "At one point he tried to force one of the guys (RCMP) off the road," says Little.

Cpl. John Laseur says the cab indeed came over the centre line when a police car was approaching from the opposite direction.

Squamish RCMP attempted to lay spikes across the road near Alice Lake but were unsuccessful. "The car was travelling way too fast," says Laseur.

"The time delay from the time the car was initially reported until the time it got to Squamish was not that long."

But in true blue Monday style, the car died on its driver.

"It just basically gave up. I'm not sure why it quit but it just stopped approximately 10.5 miles along the upper Squamish Valley," says Cpl. Laseur.

There was no struggle and the driver was arrested.

Kenneth Ryan, 25, has been charged in connection with the incident.

Report slams B.C. Hydro

by Sheila Keenan

B.C. Hydro showed little concern for the environmental consequences of draining Downton Lake and ended up killing a lot of fish as a result.

That's one of the findings in an interim report on the draining of Downton Lake that happened in early May. The lake is located about one kilometre west of Gold River.

The report was released Friday and was done by environmental lawyer Greg McDade. He recommended that B.C. Hydro and individuals responsible be charged under the federal Fisheries Act and/or the B.C. Water Pollution Act for failing to protect the environment.

Miller, Minister responsible for B.C. Hydro, said in a press release considering charges against individuals at this point was premature.

"This is an interim report and it is prudent and fair to complete the investigations and get all the information before charges are contemplated."

McDade said the attention the incident had gotten would have positive results. According to McDade's report, a Ministry of Environment biologist wrote to B.C. Hydro and asked them not to drain the lake until further study could be done. B.C. Hydro cannot explain why it drained the lake anyway.

McDade recommended that Hydro change the way it operates reservoirs and that changes be made to provincial regulations so the Environment Ministry would have more power over B.C. Hydro.

McDade's report said the federal Fisheries Act "is not a matter of policy," because it would prohibit most Hydro operations.

"The federal act doesn't basically allow any of the operations," McDade said. Hydro drained the lake in order to do an inspection for planned gate repairs to the dam.

He said an exact number of fish killed because of the draining could not be determined because they were killed both by predators picking the fish out of the water and by being sucked through the dam's turbines.

"There are no dead bodies left lying around," said McDade. He estimated the number of fish killed in the incident to be in the hundreds or low thousands. McDade expects his final report to be released in a few months.

Liberal MP made an issue of the lake draining in the recent provincial election. McDade was appointed by the provincial government to investigate the incident.

Love that lasts, at a rate that won't.

Opinions sought on Mamquam Blind Channel

By Ron Enns

Squamish residents will have their say about which of four options identified in a study about the future management of the upper reaches of the Mamquam Blind Channel is to their liking.

The area is located between Hwy. 99 and the Smoke Bluffs, at the northern end of the Mamquam Blind Channel. The land is currently partly forested and has salmon habitat value.

A survey is being distributed by the study authors — District of Squamish planning director Margaret Thornton and parks and recreation department aquatic supervisor Janet Gugins — in an effort to determine what kind of uses for the land people support.

The four options that have been identified in the study are:

- Status quo — No municipal intervention is to be taken. All existing land uses to be continued. No municipal funds are to be spent in the study area.

- Environmental conservation/sanctuary — Area is to be maintained in a "natural" state to maximize fisheries and wildlife values. No public access is to be allowed.

- Environmental park — The vision which is "at the midpoint" between high public use and environmental conservation. Provision for trails, but not necessarily a "concrete boardwalk." Provision of picnic and park seating areas, and for signage and information outlining the environmental importance of the area.

There would be few buildings except for a possible environmental interpretation centre and/or tourism information centre.

- A "people place" high-use recreation to be a "people-oriented" place. Some commercial uses such as restaurants, souvenir/craft shops, rock climbing school, would be permitted.

Uses would include: a boardwalk built around the upper reaches of the Mamquam Blind Channel; a small beach for toddlers; some boating opportunities perhaps a small marina; and typical manicured park uses such as picnic areas, park benches and gardens.

The area is to be linked to the downtown via the Mamquam Blind Channel boardwalk. The survey also asks respondents if they think water flow in the area should be opened up and asks which of the following land uses they support for the upper reaches of the Mamquam Blind Channel: recreation, industrial, commercial and residential. There is space for additional comments and concerns to be listed.

The surveys were distributed at a public open house June 5 and additional copies are available at Municipal Hall and at Brennan Park Leisure Centre. Surveys should be returned by Friday.

An adjacent piece of forested land was obtained by the district from the province as part of a land swap deal when the Stawamus Chief provincial park was created last year. Squamish Mayor Corinne Lonsdale in October at a dedication ceremony for the Stawamus Chief provincial park, which is part of the Nature Legacy of British Columbia plan, said the piece of land along Loggers Lane was destined to become part of Squamish's natural legacy.

Sensitive areas to be mapped

By Ron Enns

A hog fuel dump site and a pile of car and truck tires lies beside salmon spawning streams in the Mamquam East area north of the Mamquam Blind Channel just off Loggers Lane.

In the Meighan Creek area just north of Garibaldi Estates, a road was originally planned to be laid on top of Meighan Creek, another salmon spawning area. In both cases, residents took note and raised their voices to object to the destruction of individually small, but collectively large, salmon habitat.

Now people who are concerned about Squamish's environmentally sensitive zones have formed the Squamish Environmental Mapping Committee.

The committee is asking the people of Squamish to nominate environmentally sensitive areas for inclusion on a map that will be distributed throughout the community and used to educate people, and thus protect the areas from degradation, says committee member Brian Klassen.

Squamish resident Jim Wisnia originally came up with the idea to map the areas.

A map has been put up on the wall in the foyer in Municipal Hall, where people can write on the map and fill in form to nominate areas.

In addition to salmon spawning habitat, environmentally sensitive areas include things like deer over-wintering habitat, amphibian areas used by salamanders and frogs, and eagle viewing areas.

The committee will collect nominations throughout the summer and then develop the map.

The project is being done under the Land for Nature project of the Federation of B.C. Naturalists. Other participating clubs include Squamish Estuary Conservation Society, Steelhead Society of B.C., Squamish Trails Society, Columbia Enhancement Alliance of Squamish, and Canadian Autoworkers Union, located at 102 (B.C. Rail workers). Funding is being provided by the federal government's Action 21 program and by the Urban Salmon Program of the provincial Environment Ministry.

Brackendale students joined by special visitors

Coming down the hallway of the new Brackendale Elementary School on Friday afternoon were three visiting celebrities.

Students recognized them as they passed the glass walls of the classroom and were allowed to come to the doors to shake hands.

In the middle was Ms. Fizzle, the central character of a score of books and a television series.

Recognizable by her unusual hair style and prim cotton dress, she is the one who takes students traveling in a magical school bus. They travel not only to foreign lands but under the sea and up to the planets as well.

On one side, she linked arms with Liz Lizard, a magnificent green plush creature like a miniature dinosaur.

On the other side, she was accompanied by Franklin the Turtle —

The PAC and the Lion's Club had worked together to raise money for Brackendale's new playground. Mr. Winterburn explained all this to the students — as a new red strip was added to the thermometer on the chart, which marks the progress of the growing fund.

The Opening

At the same assembly, the whole school had practiced the new school song that Ms. Linda Halvorsen wrote for them.

their last minute Father's Day packages.

On the inside of the card is a long letter to Dad and on the outside of the card there is a collection of "coupons" for dad to use. Each may be exchanged for a job that the youngster promises to do, such as weeding, sweeping the paths, taking out the garbage or walking the dog, and so on.

The present is a bird feeder for the garden.

Young Entrepreneurs

Crafts, for sale rather than as gifts, are still being made by Ms. Rea's Young Entrepreneurs. They had a final display in Squamish Elementary School last week and I saw some handiwork that I had not seen at the Trade Fair.

Paula had egg cups, a planter, boxes and a corner shelf. All are made of wood and are beautifully painted. The shelf is backed by a street scene, cut out and brightly colored — all ready to serve as a spice rack in the kitchen or as a key holder.

Natasha had made sets of plant pots.

They come in three sizes and all are attractively decorated. Robin, who had made hair "scrunchies", had sold her entire stock within five minutes of opening and Taya's supply of pretty candles, trimmed with ribbons and lace, was almost gone too.

Jodie's picture frames are the product of an ingenious idea. She used dog biscuits to ornament the edges and varnished the whole frame to blend together.

The result looks like intricately carved wood. Fridge magnets, in the form of dainty straw hats and delicate bouquets of flowers, are Donna's specialty.

Kindergarten

The benefits of the new building are already being enjoyed. Ms. Bowcock's Kindergarten students, like those at Garibaldi Elementary School, now have their own kitchen attached to the classroom.

On Friday, they were cooking and of course, they were making dessert.

A kind parent supplied berry cups made of sponge cake. It was then quite an artistic endeavor for small fingers to pack these with strawberries, banana slices and melon.

ust as velvety and friendly as Liz. Apparently, Curious George, the monkey who is the hero of several other books, could not be there. He has promised to be at the school before its official opening June 20, however.

The students know that they can meet all these characters in the books in the school library but it was exciting to see them at their school.

Loss or Gain?

Even Liz Lizard could not make up for the fact that a student in Ms. Whittam's Grade One class though he'd lost her show and tell treasure.

It had been safely stored in a bag but she could not remember where he had put it. When questioning revealed that the treasure was a head snake, the search for it became a bit less enthusiastic.

Lions

It had already been an exciting afternoon for the whole school, as members of the Lions' Club, Ian Cassell and Mike Jensen, had also visited the school for an assembly. They had come to present a cheque for $1,000 to representatives of the school's Parent Advisory Committee.

Students demonstrate talent at spring concert

After that, a dab of cream went on top and there was a feast fit for a monarch.

After the eating came the work. The new classroom has a wide verandah overlooking a patch of garden. It also has one of the most spectacular views of the mountains. Much more to the point, though, is the fact that the work bench and the sand box and the water tray can be moved out there in good weather.

The woodwork bench was most popular on Friday and no wonder. There are well organized tool boxes, with hammers and screw drivers, little saws, rulers and pliers, as well as compartments of nails, screws, tacks and a vise on the side of the bench.

There are pieces of wood of all shapes and sizes just begging to be put together to make furniture or boats.

A fascinating thing about watching these young students in action is their sense of fair play and whose turn it is and what the rules are.

Spring Concert

Showing their expertise in a different area, the intermediate students at Stawamus Elementary School had their spring concert June 6. In spite of the fact that it had to be held in the afternoon (every evening in June seems to have its own sports events or other function), a lot of parents joined the students in the school gym.

The youngsters played their recorders and ukuleles, and performed works by Mozart, Haydn and Beethoven, as well as such favorites as A Country Waltz. It is very impressive when one sees the tremendous progress that these young musicians make in one short year.

Mr. Daly, who is their conductor, clearly passes enthusiasm on to them.

Ms. Harris is the accompanist and also conducts the choir.

They had a great time singing old favorites.

Bands on Tour

This is the time of year for school bands to go on tour, as well, and take their music a bit farther afield.

When the school board visited the Myrtle Philip community school in Whistler recently, they met an old friend, Mr. Dave Burgoyne, who used to be in Pemberton. He was accompanying a school band on its tour from Penticton to the Howe Sound district.

Howe Sound Secondary School band members recently made what was literally a flying tour to Edmonton.

The most anxious time on the trip was when it was discovered that some of the instruments had been left behind in Vancouver. Luckily, the airline quickly remedied its error and musicians and instruments were reunited by 3 p.m. Ms. Booth, the director, said that they had left Squamish soon after 5 a.m. and the students were very good about ing both the travelling and the lost luggage in stride. Some of them even got their pictures taken inside the cockpit of the plane.

In Edmonton, students were billeted with the families of the band members of Holy Trinity Secondary School and was a bit like going to stay with relatives.

The Alberta students were in Squamish in April and this was a return visit.

Both bands gave a concert at Holy Trinity and Howe Sound Secondary School students performed at an elementary school as well as in the West Edmonton Mall.

This latter, of course, is always a highlight for students and they bring back lots of stories about it.

They were gone three days and as well as learning a great deal about travelling, being guests in other people's houses and helping each other, they also shared their music and were good ambassadors for us. Thank you, Ms. Booth and the parents who helped with the 35 young people.

International show to hit local stage

Patricia Wheeler

Meeting members of Up With People is like going on a world tour.

That's how two crew members of the educational production feel about their organization.

And Robin Cooper, of New York, and Alison Simmons, of Mississippi, hope that the people of Squamish will take advantage of the international explosion that's about to rock their quiet town.

It's a unique opportunity for us to visit our community. We really hope that the community gets excited about it," says Cooper, Up With People event director.

Cooper and Simmons arrived in Squamish the first week of June and are staying with local families. The pair are preparing for Up With People's July 1 performance of The Festival, a musical extravaganza.

They have been busy working in the Festivals office on Third Avenue. With each Up With People performance, Cooper and Simmons travel to various areas to prepare for the cast's arrival. They enjoy their behind-the-scenes involvement and they wouldn't have it any other way.

It's a different end of it," says Cooper. "You really see how everything happens. It's very rewarding seeing the projects come to life after all the work we've put into it...it really is one of the most rewarding things."

Both Cooper and Simmons agree that traveling and meeting new people is most likely the most fun part of their jobs. "We meet people from all different backgrounds," says Simmons. "It makes the job very unique — we have buddies all over the world and that's kind of neat."

The work doesn't always come easy, however, and one of the jobs that Cooper and Simmons are having a tough time with is finding local billets for the cast. Accommodation is still needed for at least 70 of the 100 cast members who will be arriving in Squamish June 26. The billeting process is beneficial to both parties involved, says Cooper.

Host families provide accommodation, some meals and transportation for the students. In exchange, they receive two free tickets to the July 1 show.

Community involvement is a big part of the Up With People experience and with each performance also comes volunteer work. Cooper and Simmons say members of Up With People find the community work extremely rewarding. With each performance, the group spends several days involving themselves in various community activities. They visit schools, nursing homes, hospitals, prisons and any other place they feel they can make a difference. "We visit with people in the community. We volunteer and we'd like the young people of the community to volunteer with us," she says. "Hopefully they will be inspired to continue on with the volunteer work once we leave."

And if any local students age 17 to 25 think they'd be interested in joining Up With People, Cooper and Simmons would be happy to explain the details.

Up With People is an international education program with a purpose to build understanding and cooperation among people.

The program offers students a year-long learning program that provides involvement in six different areas including: intercultural living, performing arts, international travel, homestays, community service and business management and leadership.

Since its inception almost 30 years ago, Up With People has visited more than 45,000 locations involving 40 million people. Up With People is an independent non-profit educational organization. It is not affiliated with any religion, political group or government. And their popularity among young people is growing — each year Up With People receives more than 6,000 applications for the 700 positions available.

While their musical performances are important to Up With People members, the show is not the main focus of the group.

"The show is really our vehicle," explains Cooper. "It brings us into the cities and towns and once we're there we help out and that's really what it's all about."

Simmons says that many of the Up With People members are attracted to the organization because of the community work involved. "We make people aware of what's going on in the world," adds Cooper.

"It's a lot of fun but we're also talking about issues... about what can be happening right here in your community."

The upcoming Up With People performance of The Festival takes place at the Brennan Park Leisure Centre July 1.

Protected areas must be managed wisely

Humans and their surroundings are in never-ceasing conflict. Our mere existence guarantees that we will have some sort of impact on our environment.

The conflict is created when there are differing opinions about how much impact we should be allowed to have. The issue of our impact on the environment must be one of balance.

In British Columbia, the government during the past few years has been gingerly performing a balancing act by working toward setting aside 12 per cent of the province's land to preserve representatives of the diverse ecosystems throughout the province.

When one looks at what is happening with the 12 per cent — the majority of which is well known to us as provincial parks — as well as what is happening in the national parks that straddle the B.C.-Alberta border, one must wonder what the purpose of protected areas should actually be.

Are they places where flora and fauna can exist in an undisturbed environment, left alone to take their natural course, devoid of any impact from civilization?

Or are they places for people to "get away from it all," enjoying a natural setting away from their daily lives in a frenetic world? Once again, there must be some sort of balance.

But that balance is becoming more difficult to maintain. People demand protection, but then enter into the pristine environments and irrevocably disturb them. I am not saying that it is wrong to venture into the backcountry for some solitude and to experience nature.

In some parks, like Garibaldi Provincial Park, its west and north fringes are easily accessed by trails. With more than 100,000 visits a year to the Garibaldi Lake-Black Tusk area and about 25,000 visits to the Diamond Head area, the fringes of the park resemble small villages at some times of the year.

The majority of the park, however, is difficult to access and is visited by a perhaps a few hardy parties every year. In this way, Garibaldi Provincial Park achieves the goals of providing recreation for people in some areas and undisturbed preservation for wildlife and plants in other areas.

With the growth of outdoor adventure activities, increasing numbers of people are venturing deeper into backcountry. At Denali National Park in Alaska, strict quotas for people heading into the wilderness have been introduced to minimize the impact of humans on the fragile northern environment.

It is not only the pristineness of the backcountry that is being increasingly compromised. In Monday's Globe and Mail the headline "A drive through Jasper National Business Unit" and another below it "...and how to save the national parks" caught my eye.

Surroundings

The first story chronicles the commercialization of Jasper National Park and the conflict between human visitors and resident wildlife. (The adjacent Banff National Park to the south with its shopping mall capital of Banff is an even more vivid example of this conflict, where rutting elk clash with golfers and bears and bighorn sheep are regularly run over on the four-lane expressway in the park.)

Now, at the Columbia Icefield along the Icefield Parkway between Lake Louise and Jasper, is the new "Icefield Centre," a $7 million building with the government information centre and a hotel, restaurants and souvenir shop.

Tickets can also be bought for a "SnoCoach" ride on the Athabasca Glacier. Is the allure of private development money freely flowing into our treasured parks skewing the balance? With the supply of parks struggling to meet the demands of the population, determining the roles of our protected areas and managing them wisely is crucial.

Beware of work-from-home schemes

Work from home filling envelopes. Be your own boss. Send money for details and to show you are serious. Sound like a scam?

These words are commonly found in the columns of classified ads, but the Better Business Bureau says they know of no work-at-home scheme that has ever produced income as alleged. The BBB has been inundated with calls about envelope stuffing schemes over the last week and its advice is: if it sounds too good to be true, it generally is. "Sending money in advance for an unknown product from an unknown source equals unnecessary risk," says Valerie MacLean, BBB general manager.

Yet two work-at-home schemes marketing this area asking B.C. residents to do just that. Gem International and Vista Global Network are mailing thousands of promo pieces asking for money up front before they "show you what to do."

They are asking for $29.95 (cash or money order) to be sent to a postal box address "to prove you are serious and receive instructions."

According to the BBB, the companies promise unconditional guarantee but bureau experience has been that it is impossible to secure a refund from a mailbox, especially ones with no individual's name or phone number.

Hilltop house needs drivers

The Hilltop House van is a familiar vehicle as it travels around the community. For more information, please contact Lana at 892-4472.

The Up With People concert is less than two weeks away and accommodation is still needed for 70 young people. Daffodils to all of the guys who stopped to help me when I rolled the dump truck up at Mile 13 of the Upper Squamish Road. Your help was very much appreciated.

Daffodils and thanks to all the hard-working crew at Cable 10, in particular, Alan Richardson and Kelsey Webb for making the Sea to Sky Magazine a very successful and fun, show to produce this 1995-96 season. Special thanks to the many volunteers, guests and sponsors for making it happen. Daffs to you all. From Adriane Polo, producer.

A Gary Fisher Mamba mountain bike covered in daffodils to Kyle Nelson. Thank you so much for returning the bike that was one of many things stolen during our recent break-in. It's reassuring to know that there are people out there like you. Thanks again, from Slalom Photo.

A surprise party of daffodils to all my friends for a wonderful time on my birthday. Especially Marie for planning it.

A big Harley load of daffodils to Bruce Currie of BCCOM for the help I needed when dealing with ICBC due to a motorcycle accident. Gary Waugh.

blew to kingdom come west of Furry Creek. Even though he had plans of his own, Roy spent an hour trying to fix my car tire. The tire refused to budge but so did Roy. While he worked, Roy regaled me with stories of his life - a very colorful one, by the way. Thanks to him I kept my sense of humor and time passed quickly. When he was finally finished, Roy adamantly balked at the thought of accepting anything for his time and effort, insisting instead on following me back to Squamish to ensure I arrived safely. He had been heading in the opposite direction but that didn't matter to Roy. My safety came before my plans. There are, indeed, angels on earth.

One hundred yards of daffodils to Ralph for getting the company rolling in Britannia Beach. Our love the new road. Willow.

More schools meet dry grad challenge

More than 140 B.C. secondary schools responded to the British Columbia Automobile Association's challenge to Grade 12 students to organize safe, dry graduation celebrations in an effort to have a fatality-free class of '96.

Earlier this year, BCAA offered a BCAA family membership to each secondary school holding a dry grad celebration attended by at least 50 per cent of the school's graduating students.

BCAA public affairs officer Deborah Niccoli said more schools across the province participated in the dry grad program this year than ever before.

"It's very encouraging to see a tradition developing in B.C.'s schools," says Niccoli. "This year's huge response indicates the popularity of alcohol-free celebrations is growing and students know how to have great time without alcohol."

"Anything we can do to help reduce or even eliminate alcohol-related crashes that result in deaths and injuries, especially for young adults, is very worthwhile to us at BCAA."

In Squamish, graduating students from Howe Sound Secondary School participated in the annual BCAA dry grad program.

Community benefits from Rotary involvement

Members of the Squamish Rotary club worked throughout the day June 8 to clear the land east of the new Capilano College campus to allow the campus to be visible from Hwy. 99.

This project is just one of many that the local club is involved in. Generating revenue to help with construction costs for the Sea to Sky Trail which will start and finish at the Squamish Junction Park located in downtown Squamish is another project that the members are currently working toward.

We, who work at the chamber of commerce, are thankful every day for the contributions that Rotary made to assist in the construction of the chamber office which is also located at Squamish Junction Park. This was a rotary project from 1980 - 1983.

During Squamish Days Loggers Sports the club operates the Rotary beef barbecue, cooking over 2,000 pounds of beef each year.

Proceeds from this go to the Squamish Days Loggers Sports Association. The mandate of Rotary, which is an international non-governmental association, is "to help out where governments cannot."

Membership totals 53 in the Squamish club which includes charter members Dr. Laverne

Kindree, Jim Elliott, Jimmy Harley and Lloyd Ingraham who have been members since the club formed over 30 years ago. When asked why he is a member of Rotary, Jim Elliott responded by saying that "the community has been good to me and this allows me an opportunity to put something back."

Chamber News

Jim celebrated his 83rd birthday yesterday and can still be found in his office, Elliott Insurance, six days a week.

Happy Birthday Jim and thank you to all the members of the Squamish Rotary club for your standing continuing contribution.

Alzheimers/dementia care course completed

Vancouver Community College has just completed a course in alzheimers/dementia care for staff at Hilltop House, Howe Sound Home Support and others in the community who were interested in developing skills for working with seniors with dementia.

Karen Kline and Sheila Stickney from VCC's gerontology program where on hand June 13 at Squamish General Hospital to hand out course completion certificates to the 37 home support workers, long-term care aides, registered nurses and other health care professionals who had completed the course.

The course focused on planning care based on what seniors with dementia can do, rather than they cannot do. With participation by community, hospital and dental staff there was an important team building focus for the health care workers who completed the course.

Course funding was provided by Ministry of Health education initiatives.

Wellness council to regroup in fall

Tantalus Seniors Centre News

The annual general meeting of the Tantalus Senior Centre Society will be held tomorrow (Wednesday) in the centre at 1:30 p.m. There will be an election of officers and director. If you have suggestions you would like to make or questions you would like answered, this is the day to do it. The centre is open Monday to Friday 1-4 p.m. and is closed weekends and holidays.

If you are interested in learning to make flowers from material angels from pasta come in and see the craft ladies on Monday. We are open for new ideas. The centre is having a great turn out for crib on Wednesday so if this is your game plan, come out and try your luck. Phone Rose Gallant at 898-3384 if you are interested in the lunch prior to the game.

The centre's general meeting will be held on Wednesday.

Thursday, Rose Tatlow is going in the movie, The Lion King, if anyone wants to see it. The movie starts at 1:30 p.m. We even have popcorn.

Friday the centre is open for games of your choice. Come and enjoy a coffee and cookie.

Thursday was the windup of the wellness council. Twenty people enjoyed a delicious potluck lunch before a relaxing afternoon of music with Kristine Miles. We have enjoyed Kristine's drop-in music therapy for several weeks. Last week she honored us with a flute recital with a mixture of classical and lighter music. All those present were thrilled with Kristine's performance.

Over the Hill

The wellness council will be having an expanded program in the fall — watch for details.

Kay Smith has this message: "Calling all men and women of Squamish over 50 years of age and over."

Now is the time to join the seniors' wellness council and meet new friends. This will help you to adjust and ease you gently into your retirement years which can be utterly boring unless planned ahead of time.

Be a volunteer and make your life worth living for a happier healthier future." Register now for the fall session. Phone Phyllis Graham at 898-4403.

A meeting of the Squamish and District Diabetes Association will be held tonight in the Tantalus Seniors' Centre at 7:30 p.m. Everyone welcome including non-diabetics.

Walking Club News

Fifteen seniors and Elaine Ramsay's grandson enjoyed a walk at Brohm Ridge last week. This Thursday, June 20, we are going to Cal-Cheak. We will be meeting at the leisure centre to pool rides. As the highway to Whistler has periodic closures we must leave by 9:30 a.m., so please be at the centre prior to that time and pack a lunch.

The Over the Hill Hikers are planning a hike to the Squaw peak this Sunday June 23. Meet at the new McMillan Bloedel parking lot at 9 a.m. Phone Julie at 898-4316 or Rika at 898-5581 for more information.

Wednesday nights at 7:30 p.m. join your friends at Hilltop for their sing-along.

There were many grandparents out last week to take in the wonderful evening of ballet at the new school theatre.

I didn't have any grandchildren performing this year but truly enjoyed the performance. We have some very talented youth in our community and the little ones stole the show.

Get well wishes to Elof Eliason in hospital.

Condolences to the families of Konstantin Burdiak, Mary Renard and Harold Golden who passed away last week.

Asthma camp is almost out of breathing room

Summer is fast approaching and many children and adults are thinking about camp. Spaces are filling up for the British Columbia Lung Association's Asthma Camp.

The camp is located at Camp Luther on Hatzic Lake in Mission, and runs August 10-13 for 7- to 10-year-olds and August 14-17 for 11- to 13-year-olds.

The residential camp offers asthmatic children across the province a unique summer camp experience filled with fun activities including swimming, canoeing, hiking and crafts.

All activities are supervised by doctors and other health professionals. Each child receives individual attention to his or her physical and medical needs, including allergies.

Parents feel good about sending their children to the camp knowing they are cared for by dedicated medical professionals," says Kelly Ablog-Morant, B.C. Lung Association director of health education and program services.

"Campers meet other youngsters with the same conditions and learn to manage their asthma properly through asthma education sessions."

For camp registration forms, call 1-800-665-5864.

The cost of the camp is $125 per child, and limited financial assistance is available.

A voluntary health agency with nearly 130,000 supporters provincially, the B.C. Lung Association funds medical research, information programs on air quality and health education stressing patient independence. With less than one per cent of its budget coming from government, the association's main source of funding consists of donations from individual British Columbians.

Prepare for summer fun

Why the long face? Do you work too hard? Is school too boring?

I have the perfect solution to your woes: drop what you are doing, put your hands on your head, close your eyes and chant "summer is coming, summer is coming, summer is coming."

Wait until it sets in and you say "summer will soon be here." Now you have reason to smile. You look so much happier.

What are your plans for summer? I plan to swim, camp, hike and just about anything that consists of soaking up the rays of sun we so rarely get here.

Ka-lei-do-scope

By Kiki Lightburn

One of most people's vivid memories of summer is camp.

Waking up at 6:30 a.m., diving into the ice-cold water for your morning shower...how could you forget?

Personally, I don't think outdoor school is for me.

That's why I went to sailing school and music camp instead. And if those aren't too your liking either, there are many alternatives to consider.

Summer is meant for fun.

Fishing, camping, athletics, swimming or just watching television — choose whatever sounds like fun to you and relax.

Enjoy the summer.

Last week's ka-lei-do-scope column was written by Sarah Webb not Brooke Smith, as indicated.

MUTUAL FUNDS

A mutual fund is a pool of money that represents the savings of many people who share the same investment objective. The money is invested on their behalf by an accredited investment manager or team of managers. The mutual fund holds a portfolio of investments that may include interest-bearing securities (such as bonds, mortgages or Treasury bills) and common, preferred or convertible shares of individual companies depending on the objectives of the fund and the manager's investment strategy. With over 1,000 different mutual funds available in the Canadian market alone, you'll need a financial advisor who can help determine the type of fund that meets your investment objectives and make a specific recommendation among the funds in that category.

All in a mid-summer's day

With Midsummer only a few days away, it's well to remember what Shakespeare called the "midsummer madness."

For us northern folks, the longest day of the year is a bittersweet celebration. It means the days will only grow shorter all too quickly. No wonder we're driven to temporary madness.

Although the sun shines for its longest hours June 21, Midsummer festivities traditionally started on the evening of June 23.

Throughout northern Europe, until at least the 18th century, bonfires were lit to invoke the summer solstice. Up and down the land, hilltops blazed soon after sunset. A common custom was for people to leap over the bonfires after they had burnt down, in hope of changing their luck. This stems from ancient purification rites, given the cleansing powers of fire.

As the embers died down, some people would peer into the fire and foretell the future. Midsummer's Eve has always been regarded as a powerful time for fortune-telling, divination, fairies and magic. Shakespeare didn't have to look far for his characters and story when he wrote A Midsummer Night's Dream.

Midsummer's Day was always one of the Europe's most important festivals. The hinge of the year, it marked the half-way point of the calendar.

This was the day to gather flowers and herbs with magic properties from fields and hedgerows.

Woven into garlands and worn on the head or around the neck, these plants were believed to ward off the attentions of mischievous spirits. Even farm animals were protected by garlands of summer flowers.

It was especially important to pick the pungent yellow herb, St. John's Wort (also known as "chase-devil") on Midsummer's Day. It was believed to repel evil as well as being an effective cure for many ailments. In Wales, a sprig of St. John's Wort was placed above the door as a protective measure.

Rowan was also powerful against witches, and was burned for safety on this day.

Midsummer also brought the start of summer's abundance. Dairy cows grew fat on new grass while their milk and cream anointed the season's parade of ripening fruits and berries. English cooks developed a wealth of puddings, custards and cream pies. A very simple, old English dessert is syllabub.

Syllabub is a thick, frothy dessert that dates back to Elizabethan England. Originally it was a refreshing, foamy drink prepared by milking a cow directly into a bucket of fruit wine, cider or ale.

The name comes from "Sille," a wine then made in Sillery, in France's Champagne region. "Bub" was medieval slang for a bubbly drink. In later times it was discovered that a mixture based on cider, lemon and whipped cream produced a more sophisticated syllabub.

There a number of syllabub recipes in 18th and 19th Irish cookbooks.

This modern version calls for a sweet dessert wine and whipping cream. Serve the syllabub with Midsummer ripened strawberries and a crisp sugar cookie on the side.

Midsummer Syllabub

1/3 cup sweet dessert wine

3 to 4 Tbsp. sugar

2 Tbsp. fresh lemon juice

a strip of lemon rind, only yellow part

1 cup whipping cream

Stir the wine, sugar, lemon juice and rind together until the sugar dissolves. Adjust with more sugar or lemon juice to taste. Let stand about two hours to allow the flavors to blend. Remove the lemon rind and discard. Beat the cream in a large bowl until stiff peaks form. Gently fold in the wine mixture two tablespoons at a time. Spoon syllabub into four chilled wine glasses. Garnish with fragrant ripe strawberries.

There are several very good dessert wines suitable for making syllabub. South Africa produces lovely and inexpensive late harvest wines. Neethlingshof Late Harvest Riesling (about $16 for a half bottle) is lusciously rich with an array of fruit flavors and enough tangy acidity to keep it from tasting syrupy. Nederburg Late Harvest Chenin Blanc (about $13 for a half bottle) has the same wonderful balance of sweetness and acidity to help maintain its freshness.

LeComte Late Harvest Ehrenfels (about $12 for a half bottle) from the Okanagan is somewhat less sweet and fresher tasting with peach, apricot and honey flavors. Errazuriz from Chile now makes wonderfully brisk tasting Late Harvest Sauvignon Blanc (about $12 for a half bottle). It's not

Bird watchers gather for count

By Oona Woods

People interested in finding out more about our feathered friends met for the monthly Squamish estuary bird count Sunday, June 16.

Jim Wisnia, of the Squamish Estuary Conservation Society, hopes as many people as possible will get involved. "It's a great way to find out more about our bird neighbors and the estuary itself. We have a number of different types of habitat for the birds."

Wisnia says that the estuary is unique in that it has complex networks of sloughs and channels that change from salt water to fresh as the tide changes. The mud flats, marshy areas and partly to completely submerged sedges provide an ideal location for many different kinds of birds.

"At this time of year, you can expect to see a real wide variety of species," said Wisnia. Waterfowl like trumpeter swans should be around and song birds will be nesting in the sedge marshes and higher meadows."

There are also areas suited to woodpeckers as the trees are killed through salt, the snags and dead wood provide the perfect habitat for them.

Bald eagles and other birds of prey nest in the shores around Howe Sound because of all the salmon that pass through.

The count has been a feature of the area for the last four and a half years. Wisnia has compiled a base of data that he hopes will be of some use in the future.

"We hope that pour kids or grandkids will be able to look back in decades to come and see patterns in birding. There were some studies done in the early 70s and 80s but they were only seasonal."

"With the number of bird watchers steadily growing, we are able to collect more and more data. Birding is a really good indicator of what is happening environmentally."

American tourists flip over local fun day

by Billy

Amazing what can happen when people get together to help make a project a reality. Recently, 65 Jewish kids and their chaperons from Los Angeles booked a trail ride at Sea to Sky Stables, where some of the tour guides were on a horse, wouldn't you know?"

Within days McKinney received the call from Kosher Tours, booking this group of 65 13 year-olds and their adult chaperons. The boys arrived first at around noon with picnic lunches, which they ate on site, then got ready for one of the best days they may ever have in their lives.

Helping set the stage for this "city slickers" meet "Curly" show (for those who've seen the movie) was wrangler Bill Bertschy, a tall, dark, inscrutable First Nations man who has worked guest/dude ranches on both sides of the border since 1979.

He knows a bit about how to entertain the troops, let's say. He starts out like a sergeant major and ends up giving them more fun than most people can handle in one day, but we'll get to that in a minute.

He ordered the boys to line up and count off and to remember their numbers, then to join their groups. If they forgot their number he made them all line up and count again.

When they finally got it right it was time to mount the horses.

He began by asking if any of them had been on a horse before.

Some said, "Yes, once I think." He said, "You think? If you'd been on a horse, wouldn't you know?"

"You think? If you'd been on a horse, wouldn't you know?"

— Wrangler Bill Bertschy

Once up on the horse, for some it seems an awfully long way to the ground, and they wanted to get off, but Bertschy made them wait until everyone was on a horse.

By then they had all gotten used to it enough to be able to proceed.

Bertschy took the position as outrider about 20 feet off to the side so he could keep his eye on everyone and point out things of interest or warn of overhanging branches or other dangers.

They asked him if they'd see any bears or other wild animals. He said not likely.

They asked him what his name was and he told them "Nightmare".

They asked him what the horse's names were and he told them Trigger, Goldie, Killer and 51. "But if it bucks you off, we'll have to change it to 52," he said.

They asked Mike McKinney to sing Oh Canada for them, so he did.

One of the boys lost his yarmulke, and Mike's son, Jason, also 13, and already an experienced guide, told him he'd dropped his "toque".

Needless to say the kid looked at him like he was speaking another language. Culture shock and education go both ways.

The boys left to return to the city and within minutes the girls and their chaperons arrived — all in skirts.

But they were a happy lot and quickly split into their three groups.

They had a ball. They sang, had a great time with the horses and loved the beauty of the area, saying they'd been for a river rafting trip on the Skagit the day before, but it was nothing compared to this.

They were inquisitive about everything and wanted badly to see some wildlife, but as Mike said, they weren't quiet enough. The girls all had googly eyes for Jason, as the boys in the morning had swooned over Ashley and Tiffany.

One incident gave wrangler Bill a chance to show that chivalry is not dead, (yet). One of the chaperons forgot to duck while riding among the trees. A branch scooped her wig off and it fell to the ground. Bertschy retrieved it for her and with embarrassed smiles all around it was returned to its owner.

It took a lot of people and a lot of cooperation to bring this busy day to a happy conclusion.

Others McKinney wants to thank who gave up their own day to help make this one his first big success were Larry and Diane Cornet who came all the way from Birkenhead, Jill Allan from Squamish and last but not least, Marie McKinney, Mike's partner.

It was an amazing feat, to accommodate 70 people, at a business that barely had its barn doors open and to have them leave there with memories they'll likely be telling their grandchildren some day.

The one thing everyone said was the best was that they laughed all day.

Sea to Sky Stables is west of the Cheekye B.C. Hydro substation, left just before the Dakin sawmill.

When you get there, tell Nightmare I said hello.

Test of Metal makes mountain bike fans out of Squamish

Hundreds of volunteers and spectators made local riders proud with their support of the Squamish Mountain Bike Festival

By David Donaldson

The fastest Squamish rider to complete the Test of Metal race was more impressed with the organization of the race and the enthusiasm of the community than his fourth-place finish.

"Without a doubt it was the best race I've ever been to," said Dave Heisler, a pro rider who has competed in everything from local events to Canada Cup races in his 10-year career.

"On every little road section there were people out there cheering — it just blew me away. I'd never seen that kind of support from the community."

Heisler says it was the incredible effort from all the volunteers that really ensured the success of the Test of Metal and the Squamish Mountain Bike Festival last weekend.

Nearly 300 volunteers from the community donated their time to ensure a smoothly run event, with members of the Squamish Emergency Program organizing the first aid marshaling and the Squamish Amateur Radio Club helping with communications and updating race officials with the riders' progress. It was also a busy day for the staff at Squamish General Hospital who attended to more than 20 riders injured in the big race.

"There was a remarkable amount of riders who went down with serious lacerations who didn't get attended to until after the race," said Paul Kindree of SEP.

A total of 446 racers competed in the Test of Metal race Sunday. When Heisler saw the quality of riders he was up against, he moved his original goal of finishing in the top three down to a top 10 finish. Racing against some of the top 10 riders in Canada, Heisler said he "really had to dig down" to stay with them late in the race.

He came out hard at the beginning but after he took the first prime he realized it wasn't within his ability to escape the lead pack and backed off to about 30th in the positioning.

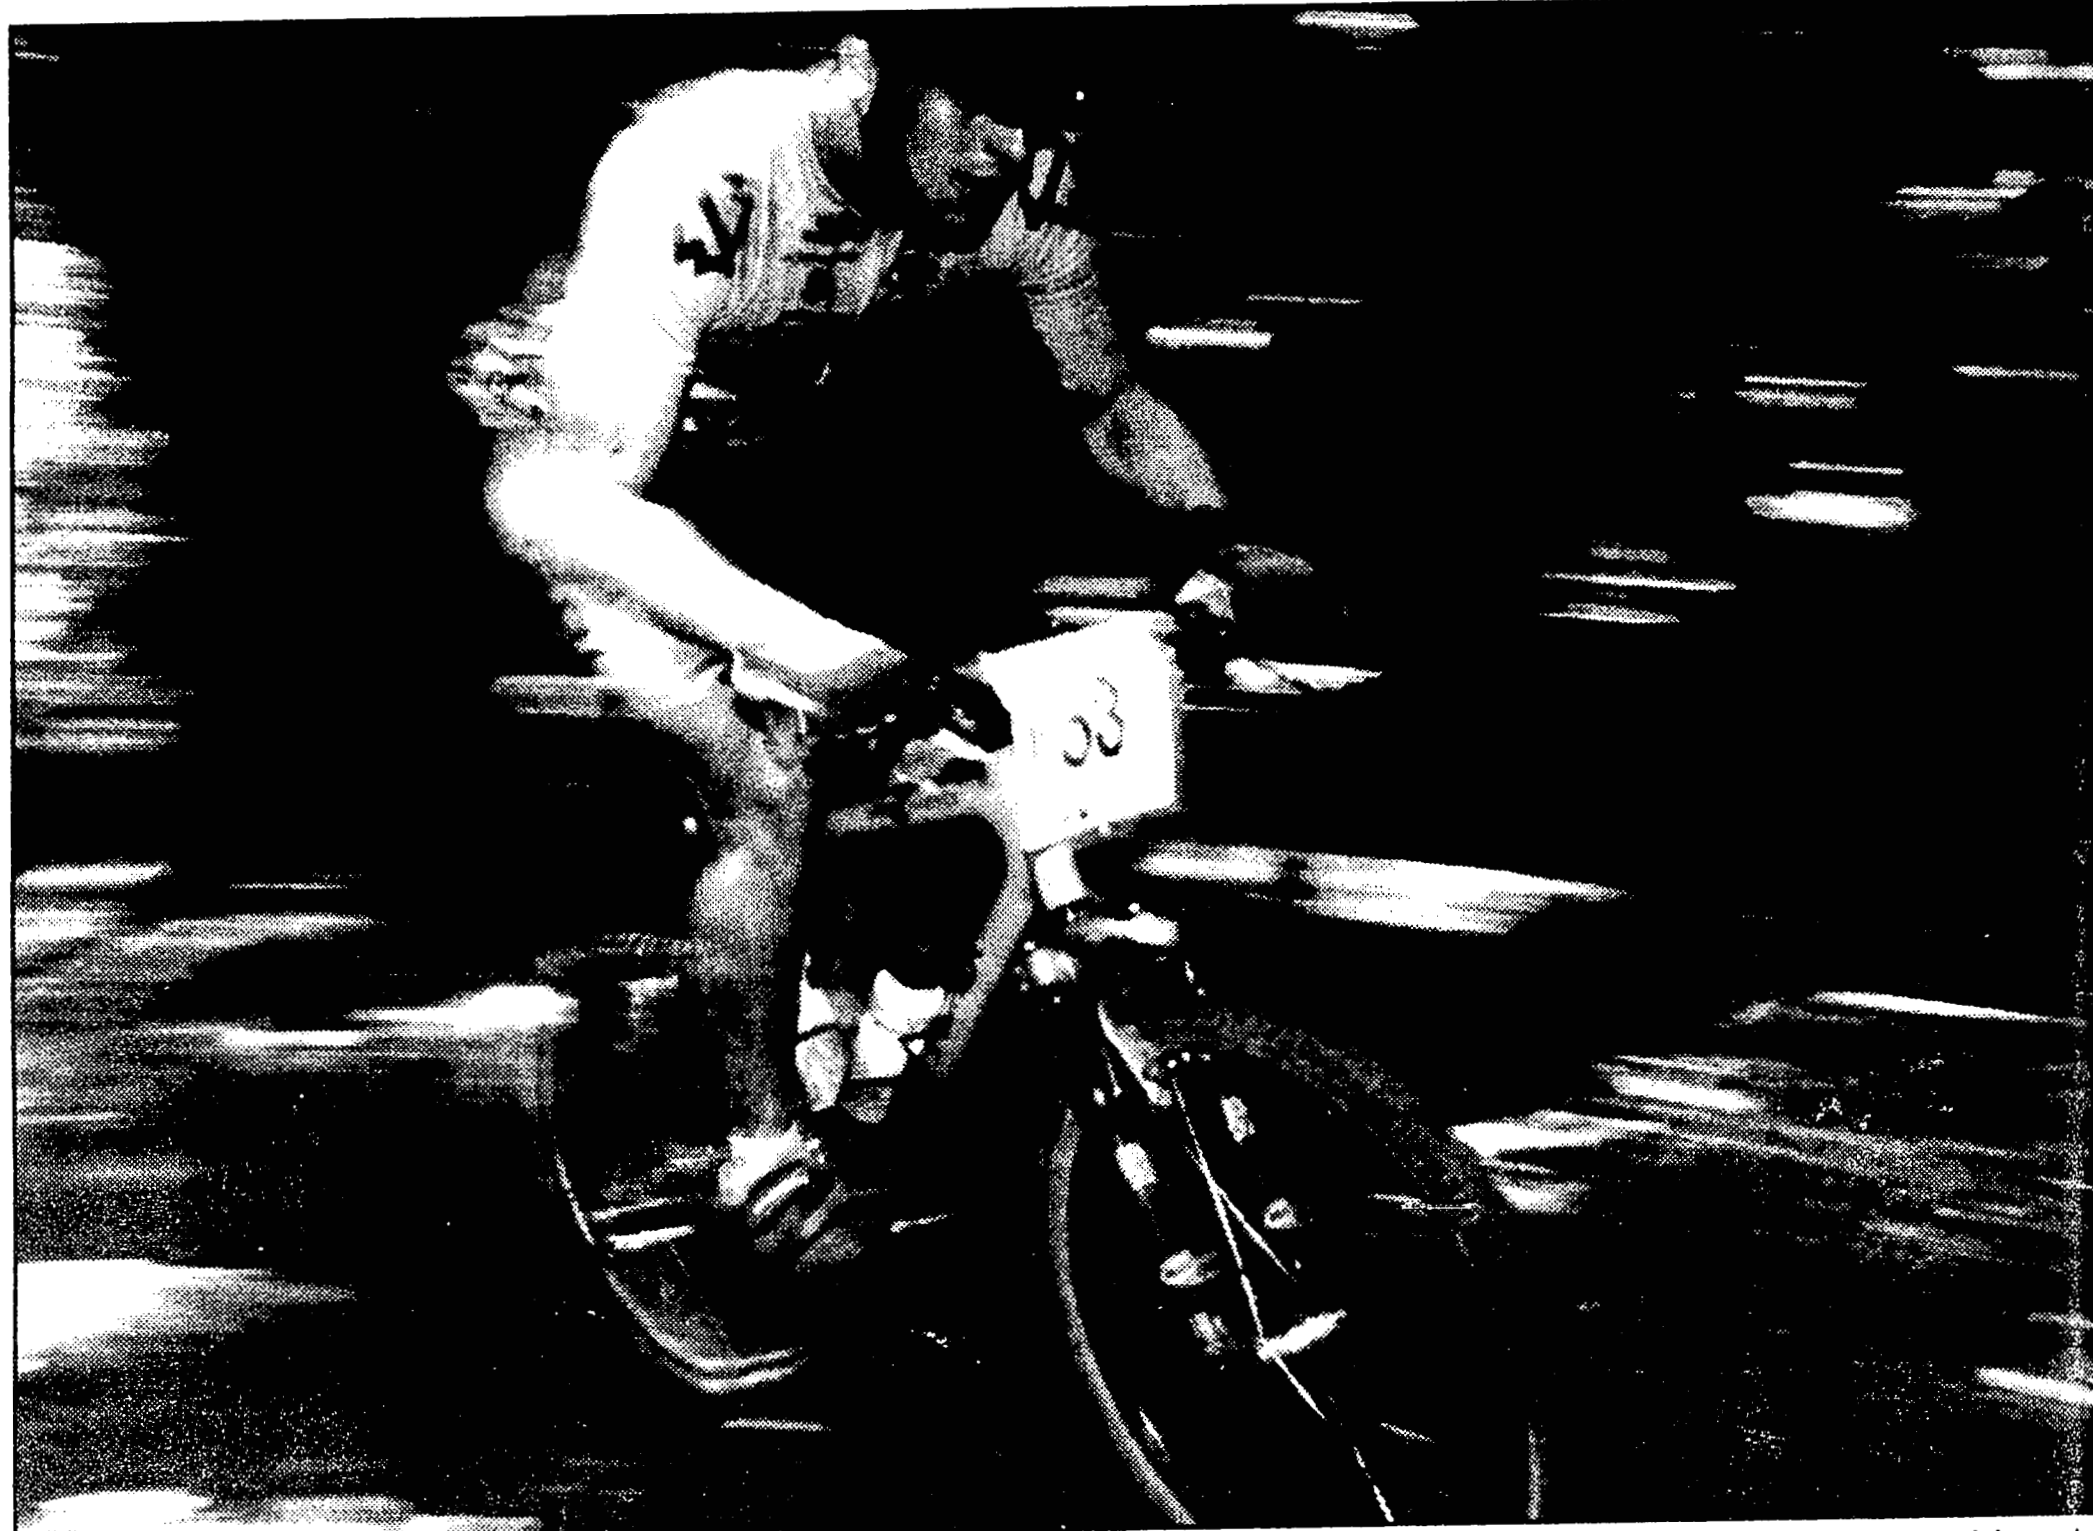

Heisler paced himself, hoping everyone would "go hard, hard, hard and blow," which is what many of them did, allowing him to pass 10-12 riders in the last two hours of the race and finish in fourth place with a time of 2:53:23.

Carter Hovey, a second-year pro from Victoria, finished first in the men's senior pro category at 2:49:49, followed by Mike Palmer at 2:50:53, Adam Walker at 2:52:34, Heisler and Ruedi Schneider at 2:55:58. In the same category Whistler's Mike Edwards finished 14th at 3:03:42 and Scott Ross, who Heisler says would have won on a better day, was 19th at 3:06:00.

There was a close battle between the two fastest females of the race with Whistler's Sally Carmichael edging out Squamish's Phyllis Delleney by five minutes. A senior pro, Delleney finished at 3:44:35 and was ahead by eight minutes at one point but Carmichael, a senior expert, caught her coming out of Valleycliffe to finish at 3:39:59. Allison MacDonald of Pemberton was third in senior pro and Squamish-born Diana Kilby was fourth.

Husband and wife Heisler and Delleney were presented with the Squamish Chief

In the senior expert category Mike Banner was second, senior beginner/sport Whistler's Kenneth Marler was first, Squamish's Brennan Covey was second, Ben Bakk of Whistler was third and Warren Scott of Squamish was seventh.

Pemberton's Jim Franken was second in veteran expert, Paul Rawlinson of Whistler was third, and in veteran beginner Carl Muller of Squamish was first, Troy Lynn of Squamish was second, Paul Fournier of Whistler was fourth and Grant Lamont of Whistler was 23rd.

In the citizen category, senior rider Chris Staats of Squamish was 44th, veteran Squamish riders Stewart Kerr, Bob MacIntosh and Andy Kuprel were 10th,

In Saturday's Teenage Test of Metal cadet boys riders Aaron Munster of Whistler was first, Jody Edgar of Whistler was sixth, Bryce Munster was seventh, Dale Addis of Squamish was eighth, Jason Blue of Pemberton was 14th, James Green of Squamish was 17th, Brandon Cayker of Squamish was 22nd, followed by Whistler's John Pyatt, 23rd and David Hardy, 28th.

Thunder in the Streets ready to roll

By David Donaldson

If you feel the ground shaking beneath your feet during the weekend of June 29-30 don't worry, it's not the Big One. The pavement will be quaking from the rumble of mega-horsepower engines as the streets of downtown Squamish are struck by the fourth annual Thunder in the Streets auto slalom.

Organizers are anticipating 40-50 cars from all over Washington State and British Columbia to race in the event which is "not so much a competition as an exhibition," says organizer Leigh Schoenberger of the Squamish/Whistler Car Club, because the racers are driving to put on a great show for the crowd, not win prizes and awards.

The event is a showcase for the top slalom drivers in the province competing in the same classes as regional car club events — super stock, street prepared and modified. Auto enthusiasts can look forward to heading to the pits while the race breaks for the Royal Hudson's arrival to check out late model Camaros, Mustangs, a 427 Cobra, a heavily modified Honda Civic, and even an exotic Super 7 is rumored to be making an appearance. For safety reasons, bicycles will not be allowed in the pit area this year.

Spectators will be able to cheer on their hometown favorites as most of the SWCC members will be competing in the race and being clocked by the out-of-service radar gun donated by Whistler RCMP Staff Sgt. Jim Eglinski.

There are still sponsorship opportunities available for the event, as well as volunteer positions in crowd control as organizers hope to top the 5,000 person turnout of last year. Anyone interested can contact Leigh Schoenberger at 892-9877.
