

Opinions differ on shopping centre safety requirements

Issue of overpass extension concept a stumbling block

By Ron Enns

Agencies required to grant the final approval for a proposed shopping centre on Hwy. 99 at Mamquam Road will not do so unless the concerns of the Mamquam Elementary School parents' advisory council regarding safety of school children have been addressed. Developer Gulf Pacific Investments, however, believes that adequate safety can be ensured without an extension of the existing pedestrian overpass, a feature which the parent advisory council is adamantly demanding.

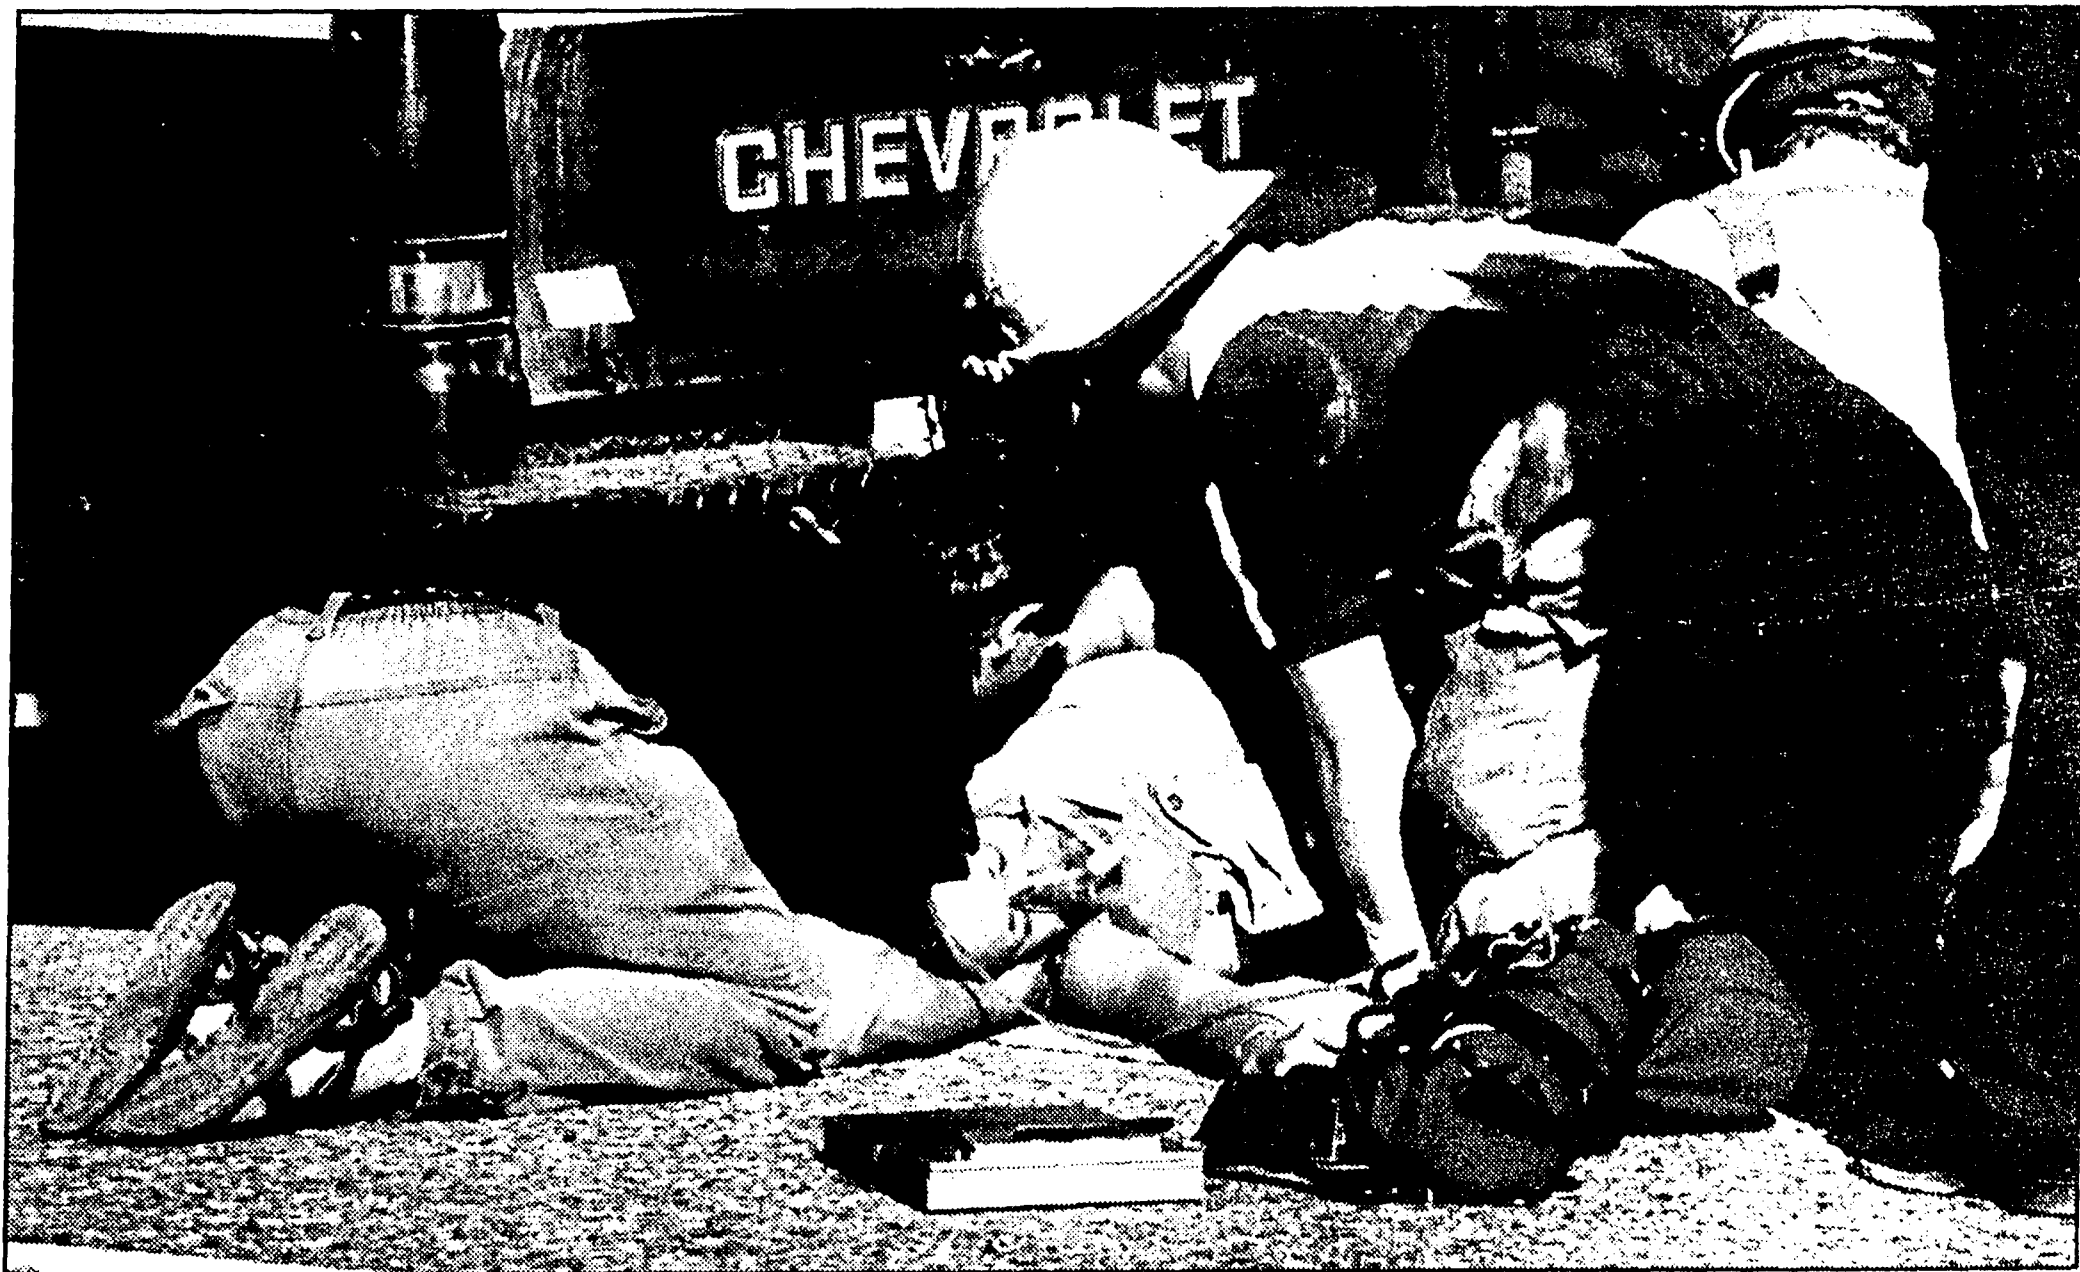

Approvals for the project are required by the District of Squamish and the provincial Ministry of Transportation and Highways before Gulf Pacific can proceed with the proposed Garibaldi Plaza shopping centre, which has recently been changed to include large Zellers and Extra Foods stores as well as other smaller stores and restaurants on the same site as the original proposal, which did not include the Zellers but numerous smaller stores. The Ministry of Transportation and Highways on Monday said that before an agreement with Gulf Pacific is reached and approval granted, safety concerns must be addressed. As well, it had been decided at a meeting in February that the parents' advisory council will be given an opportunity to review any new alternatives or solutions before a final decision is made. However, ministry regional director Joe Jensen said the concept of the extension of the overpass would be the responsibility of the municipality as it would be located beyond the ministry's right of way.

District of Squamish public works director Mike Darbyshire said the district's position is that if Gulf Pacific does not proceed with the overpass extension, he would not be willing to make a recommendation to council until Gulf Pacific and the parents' advisory council achieve consensus on an optimum solution.

As well, the Howe Sound School District has said it will not approve of any plan until the safety issues of concern to the parents' advisory council have been addressed. School district chief executive officer Doug Courtice said the school board desires that the parents' advisory council be involved in the safety issue. He also said the school district will rely on the expertise of the Ministry of Transportation and Highways and the RCMP when it comes to safety issues.

The parents' advisory council's safety committee has taken the position the extension of the overpass is necessary so children walking to and from school would not have to — as proposed by the developer — cross an extension of Diamond Road at an entrance to the shopping centre. It is proposed that the crossing, without the overpass extension, would have a flashing signal and a

Eight injured in crash

An accident near Shannon Falls Friday night left eight people injured. The highway was closed in both directions while the accident area could be cleaned of debris.

"A blue Chevy Blazer was southbound on Hwy. 99 and when a white van attempted to make a U-turn directly in front of the Blazer, the driver of the Blazer swerved into the northbound lane but then ended up striking a black GMC Tracker," said Squamish RCMP Cpl. Joe Schofield. The Blazer then rolled over. The van left the scene.

Schofield said the police need to talk to the driver of the van in order to conclude their investigation. Schofield encourages anyone with information to contact the Squamish RCMP detachment.

"If the driver of the van becomes aware of this, we'd like that person to come forward and talk to us," he said.

Emergency crews were on hand quickly Friday night at a traffic accident at Shannon Falls which sent eight people to hospital with a variety of injuries, none life threatening. Volunteer fire fighters helped stabilize and comfort the victims while ambulance attendants tended to the most seriously injured. David Donaldson photos

Gulf Pacific says safety issue has been dealt with

stop sign.

Gulf Pacific president Bruce Russell on Monday said only "fine tuning" remains before an agreement is reached with the Ministry of Transportation and Highways. He said that adequate safety can be provided for school children without extending the pedestrian overpass and added that the cost of extending the overpass is prohibitive. (Gulf Pacific says its costs were raised significantly because of requirements by the Highways and Transportation Ministry that the developer widen the highway to four lanes and requirements by the District of Squamish to widen Mamquam Road and upgrade the sewer system. And, with the development to be built in the floodplain, the site will have to be raised up to three metres above its current elevation.)

Gulf Pacific said the safety issue will be dealt with as part of the new rezoning request and added that it stands behind the RCMP's position. Squamish RCMP spokesperson Const. Fran Bethell said recently retired Staff Sgt. Ken Jones did visit the site of the proposed shopping centre last winter and felt that safety had been addressed satisfactorily in Gulf Pacific's proposal.

The issue of the parents' advisory council's insistence on the extension of the pedestrian overpass has transcended the involvement of the bureaucracy and the parents' advisory council's struggle to convince the developer to build the extension. Russell's lawyer in March sent a letter to the Mamquam school parents' advisory council threatening a lawsuit for impugning Russell's credibility, McKay said.

She added that the parents' advisory council had chosen not to go public with the issue of the lawsuit threat earlier "as we wished to keep the safety concerns as our main focus."

Russell said he believed that his character had been damaged by a statement printed in a letter from the parents' advisory council to the Diamond Head branch of the Royal Canadian Legion — and copied and sent to various approving agencies, including the Ministry of Transportation and Highways, the District of Squamish, the school district and the Mamquam school principal — that he allegedly made. The statement had to do with Russell's view of the safety issue. He said he requested from the parents' advisory council a retraction and an apology, neither of which he has received. He said he will not pursue the matter further.

Council at its meeting today bringing forward a motion with the intent of rescinding the first three readings of bylaws to do with the consolidation of several parcels of property on which Gulf Pacific was going to build the shopping centre. Gulf Pacific will then present council a new development plan, which it is proposing to build a 80,000-square-foot Zellers store, 40,000-square-foot Extra Food store, a new 8,000-square-foot Legion and other stores and restaurants totalling another 10,000 square feet.

Originally, Gulf Pacific was proposing to build numerous smaller stores anchored by Extra Food but now believes market conditions in Squamish — including the under construction Squamish Station shopping centre by BCR Properties — dictate that a larger store is needed instead of more smaller stores.

If council approves in principle Gulf Pacific's new plan, another public hearing must be held before council adopts the requested rezoning.

An official community plan amendment would not be required.

AFN teaching civil disobedience at meeting in Squamish

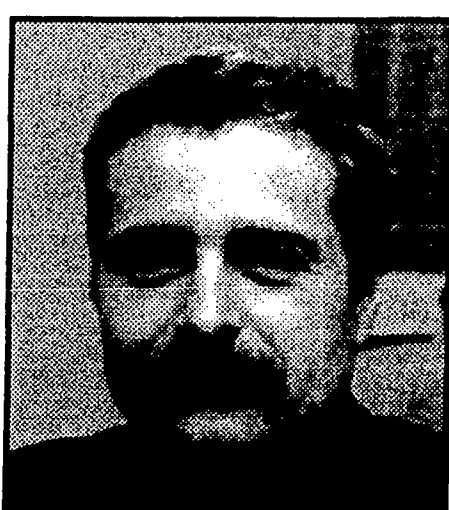

The Assembly of First Nations will sponsor a meeting Oct. 8-10 in Squamish to teach native Indians methods of non-violent civil disobedience.

The Assembly of First Nations is Canada's most prominent native group. Assembly chief Ovide Mercredi is promoting sovereignty for first nations across Canada. His initiative may include wider use of non-violent civil disobedience like roadblocks and sit-ins.

The federal and British Columbia governments are currently negotiating land claims in British Columbia with first nations, including the Squamish Nation.

Burning ban now in place

Burning restrictions have been imposed in Squamish until further notice, due to the recent hot and dry weather. Squamish Fire Rescue last week put into effect a ban on all class A and B burns until further notice.

Ray Saurette

Class A burns include large wood piles that have been created from brush clearing using machinery. Class B burns include back yard burns and burning of construction waste. The ban does not apply to camp fires or barbecue fires.

Squamish Fire Rescue policy is to put the ban in place when the Squamish Forest District fire hazard is rated as high, which it now is.

Deputy fire chief Ray Saurette said that rain is needed before the ban is lifted. The fire department will respond to complaints that are received. Offenders can be charged, but there have not been problems in the past, Saurette said.

Lawn sprinkling banned

Excessive use forces increased water restrictions

By Ron Enns

After consistently exceeding its water licence on the Stawamus River during last week's hot spell, the District of Squamish has been forced to put into place water restrictions.

Effective last Friday, lawn irrigation — except for newly planted turf areas — is prohibited in all areas of the municipality as a condition of stage two of the district's water shortage response plan.

Earlier last week, the district had enacted stage one, which consists of voluntary water restrictions. However, even with voluntary water restrictions in place, the district's water licence of 2.5 million gallons per day from the Stawamus River was being exceeded, with daily water volumes drawn from the Stawamus ranging from 2.8 million to 3.0 million gallons. (On July 7, before the voluntary restrictions were enacted, the district withdrew 3.3 million gallons of water from the Stawamus River.)

Exceeding the licence carries potential charges under the provincial Water Act and the federal Fisheries Act.

Any fines imposed by these agencies would be recovered through the water utility, which would have a direct influence on the rate Squamish taxpayers pay for water.

The district had been using a back-up plan to decrease the amount of water withdrawn from the Stawamus River — which usually services all of Squamish, except for Garibaldi Highlands — by increasing usage of the Mashiter Creek intake, which usually services only Garibaldi Highlands but now has been supplying Brackendale with water as well.

"It kind of takes the top off the Stawamus and keeps us within our licence and makes the system a little more flexible," said district public works director Mike Darbyshire, adding that the back-up has not been perfected, thus necessitating the imposed water restrictions.

In the past, water restrictions in Squamish have allowed some lawn watering on designated days, similar to a system used in the Greater Vancouver Regional District. But that system is not effective in Squamish because, unlike the GVRD, which attempts to lessen the draw of water from its reservoirs, "when we exceed our licence there is nothing there to give...so we have to just cut it off across the board. That's the lesson we learned last year — if we encourage people to use water, we still could potentially exceed our licence."

Under stage two, Squamish residents can still water their gardens and flowers using sprinklers.

If the water licence is still being exceeded while under stage two, stage three would be enacted, in which case all outdoor water use would be prohibited. Garden watering would be permitted with a hand-held hose or water can.

In stage two, public works staff and bylaw enforcement staff will issue warnings for a first offence of lawn watering, but the second offence will result in a charge under the water use bylaw, Darbyshire said. Newly planted turf areas are excepted, but a permit from the public works department is required. There is no charge for the permit.

Darbyshire said on Monday that he did not know how effective the water restrictions have been because he had not yet received figures on how much water had been withdrawn from the Stawamus after the stage two restrictions had been imposed.

The district, which is anticipating having some operational ground water sources in 1997, will be able to better address water licence, fisheries and water quality issues when ground water wells are in place. In winter, murky surface water sources can be shut down when necessary and ground water used until turbidity lowers. In summer, it is intended that ground water will supplement the currently over-taxed surface water sources. And in fall, when surface water sources may have lower flows, ground water could again be used exclusively to provide ample water for to satisfy fisheries concerns.

The district is currently working on a test production ground water well near the confluence of Mamquam River and Mashiter Creek and exploring ground water opportunities at Powerhouse Creek, east of Squamish near the Mamquam hydroelectric project.

Environmental agencies have said they will not approve of the in-progress Stawamus-Mashiter integrated watershed management plan until environmental and fisheries concerns and the issue of minimum downstream flows have been addressed. The licence on Mashiter Creek does have a provision for ensuring minimum downstream flows, however, the older Stawamus licence does not.

Police car mirror vandalized on a dare

A police car was vandalized July 5 at about 10 p.m. when someone broke the driver's side mirror off the police car, which was parked at the Squamish A&W.

With the help of a witness report, police arrested a young man at the scene. The young man's response to police was that someone in a large gathering of teenagers in the parking lot dared him to commit the act of vandalism that occurred.

Neilish Rishi Deo, 19, was charged with mischief and obstructing a police officer. Deo, who was taken into custody, was released the following day on conditions that he is not to consume alcohol outside his residence, that he is not to go to the Squamish A&W and that he appear in court July 23 to answer to the charge.

U.K. forestry delegation views changing practices

By Ron Enns

The British Columbia government is hoping a delegation from the United Kingdom which toured the Squamish Forest District last week will take back to Europe a positive report of changing logging practices in the province. But the environmental group Western Canada Wilderness Committee says the scheduled itinerary of the tour will provide the delegation with a biased and inaccurate depiction of current forest practices.

Paul Kuster, district manager of the Squamish Forest District, said the Ministry of Forests' international relations department has specifically invited high-profile people from abroad in an effort to show them that forest practices in B.C. have changed, contrary to reports made by some foreign media that B.C.'s forest practices are destructive. He said some magazines are currently considering not buying paper products from B.C. to protest what they believe are devastating forest practices. Some environmental groups have called for boycotts of B.C. forest products.

Eight people from the United Kingdom were on the tour, including various representatives from government, the deputy editor of Timber Trades Journal, university and college lecturers and a representative of the Timber Growers Association of the U.K. As well, the forest products counsellor of the Canadian High Commission in London and a Canadian Forest Service representative from Ottawa were part of the delegation. The tour was sponsored by the Canadian Forest Service and included visits to New Brunswick, Quebec and B.C.

Kuster said tours like these make a major impact because "the people that come over here have understood a lot better and been able to pass on to people in their home countries that what we're seeing on TV might be old stories."

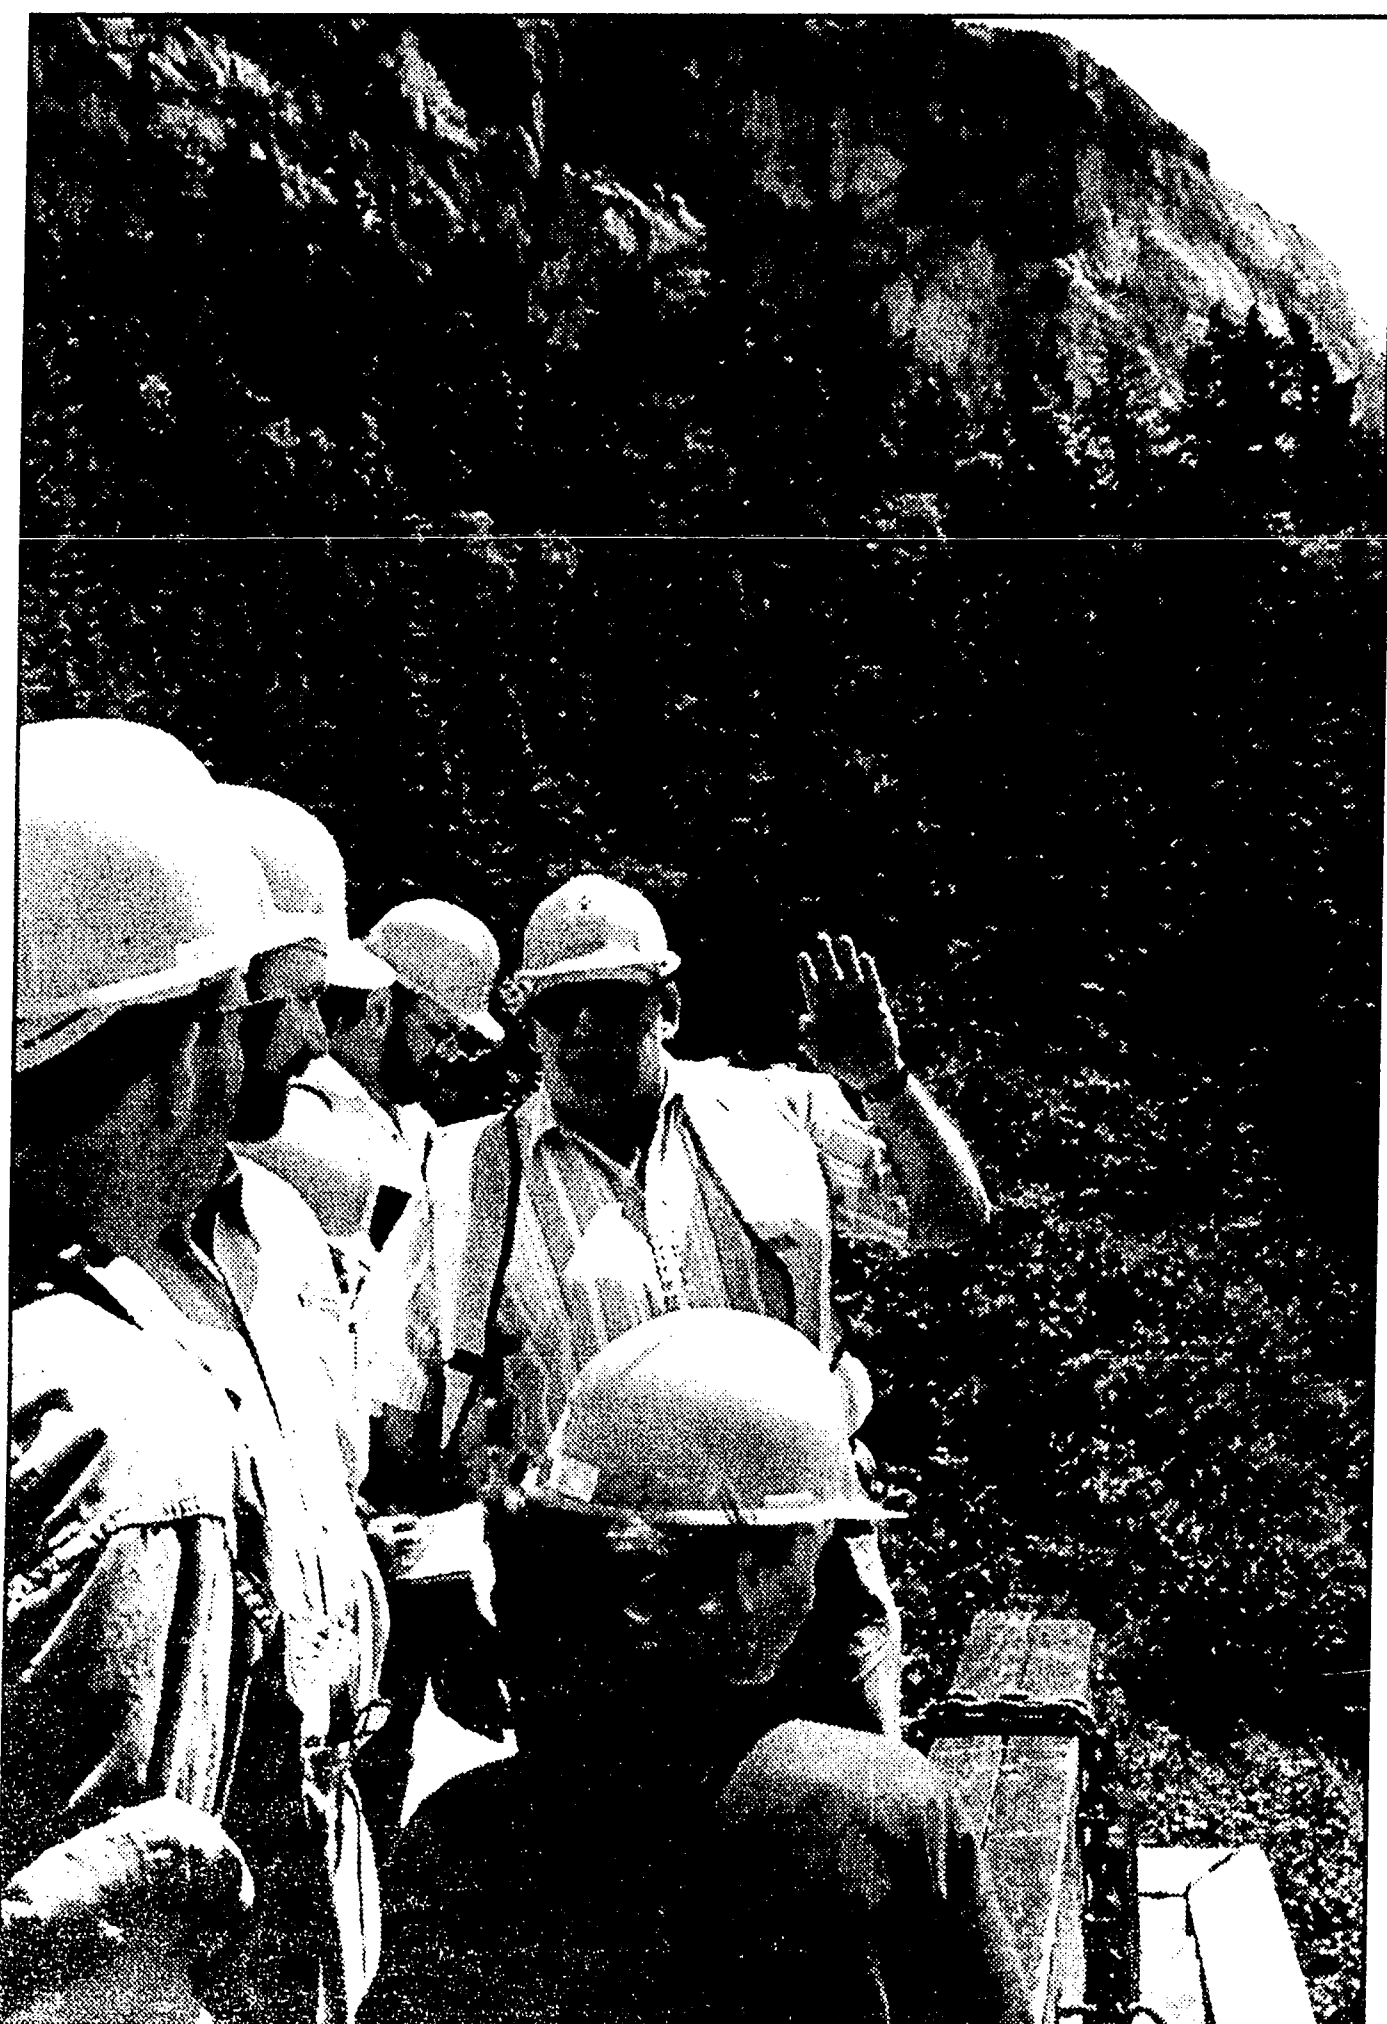

"Some of the worst pictures that have been shown on TV and published in newspapers represent the past — you know, the progressive clear cutting and devastation from logging roads that have always been depicted."

"Sometimes they don't tell the complete stories either. They show a very bad picture of something. And yes, there are examples of the past or pictures that nobody is proud of."

Kuster said the introduction one year ago of the B.C. forest practices code has profoundly changed forest management: clear cuts are smaller, buffers along streams are bigger and progressive clear cutting is a thing of the past. He added that the forest practices code is universal throughout the province, with special management no longer reserved only for high-profile areas on Vancouver Island like Clayoquot Sound, Walbran and Carmanah.

But Western Canada Wilderness Committee campaigner Kerry Dawson, prior to last week's tour, said the forest practices code "is not all it's cracked up to be at this point. It's doubtful if it ever will be effective at all in protecting biodiversity and ecosystems."

Dawson said she has serious problems with the tour's agenda, in which International Forest Products was conducting a tour of its Squamish sawmill.

"The thing I'd like to know is Interfor showing them the illegal road building activity in the Elaho Valley right now?" Dawson questioned, referring to the company's tree farm licence area north of Squamish. "Are they going to show them where they built a logging road in a Class A fish-bearing stream in Sims Creek? Are they going to show them where their clear cuts are being over-extended past 40 hectares into adjacent to areas that aren't greened up yet?"

"It's painting a really rosy picture here showing them the positive things — taking them to a sawmill happy workers, that sort of facade whereas they are not showing them that jobs are declining in that region...because of industrial forest practices."

What the tour participants saw included glading of ski runs on Blackcomb Mountain. They went on a nature walk with Morgan Wells of the Mt. Currie Indian band. They took a look at the Whistler interpretive forest and they saw heli-logging in action at Britannia Creek. Near Squamish, they were shown an example of selection logging in the Ring Creek area. The Squamish Forest District by edict requires all companies to harvest 10 per cent of its cutblocks using alternative methods to clear cutting. That figure may increase in the future, Kuster said.

Dawson said the 10 per cent is a move in the right direction. "But there's still 90 per cent being clear cut. It's not going to do a whole lot in the long run. We have to move our entire forest industry toward more sustainable eco-forestry methods — selection logging, smaller operators, ban clear-cut logging completely — to maintain ecosystems."

Kuster also drew attention to visual quality objectives the forest district has met along the Hwy. 99 corridor, which is an area of intense recreational use.

But Dawson said there was nothing else on the tour's agenda about forests providing for tourism and long-term jobs in the future.

Paul Kuster

"I think they are going to be providing obviously a very one-sided and biased perspective for these poor people from Britain.

"The tour that we would give them would look an awful lot different."

Visitors impressed with forestry planning, trends

By Andy Stonehouse

The British visitors travelling the varied forest operations of the Sea to Sky corridor during last week's government-sponsored tour say they were impressed by the province's new directions in more careful logging.

Gordon Mann, chief planning official for forestry work in Scotland's southwest region, says the group's two days in Pemberton, Whistler and Squamish helped open their eyes to the way work is done in the old growth forests of Canada.

"We were very impressed, especially with the way that planning is done and the trend to involve the community in the process," Mann said.

Mann says that after the group's same-trip experiences in New Brunswick and Quebec — where they saw clearcuts 600 hectares wide — B.C.'s more planned and public-sensitive approach to forest management has challenged some of the visitors' media-fed images.

"We'd like to be able to spread the word about the changes in Canadian forestry. I think the more we understand about each others' countries, the better the relations will be."

Sally Spencer, an editor with the U.K.-based Timber Trades Journal, says she and fellow visitors have been amazed by the level of sophistication in dealing with the province's vast timber reserves — although she admitted even seeing red cedar trees 25 metres high was a big enough shock for the visitors.

The group's arrival at the Pemberton airport on Thursday was also a significant occasion as the government-sponsored pair of Dash 7s carrying the group were amongst the first major jet-powered users of the fledgeling facility.

Safety issues must be addressed

It is common knowledge that Gulf Pacific Investments has had quite a struggle with the Ministry of Transportation and Highways during the last year or so in attempting to reach an agreement regarding access, egress and cost-sharing for road work required if a new shopping centre is to be built along Hwy. 99 at Mamquam Road. So when Gulf Pacific vice-president Ken Harris said recently that the development company has reached an agreement with the ministry and that the safety issues relating to school children that walk through the area had been addressed, Mamquam Elementary School parents' advisory council members were surprised. They were surprised because they had been promised by the Ministry of Transportation and Highways — at various levels, from the regional office right up to the minister's office — that it would consult the parents' advisory council about safety issues prior to finalizing an agreement.

Other agencies — including the school board and the municipality — agreed that the parents should have a say. Some people — including the parents' advisory council's safety committee — believe that the only way safety can be addressed is by extending the existing pedestrian overpass so that children will not have to cross a street at an entrance to the proposed shopping centre. Others — including the developer and the RCMP — are satisfied that safety can be ensured with out the extension of the overpass. But last week, Ministry of Transportation and Highways bureaucrats were hiding behind voice mail systems and handing off their responsibilities to other ministry offices. For four days last week, phone calls from The Squamish Chief were redirected. Each day, promises were made that the ministry would officially state its position for the Chief later in the day or the following day. Finally, on Monday, a ministry regional director confirmed that an agreement with Gulf Pacific has yet to be reached. He added that the safety concerns of the parents' advisory council will have to be addressed before there is an actual agreement.

In the meantime, Squamish municipal council will be reconsidering the project, which has changed in its design, but not in its size. The new proposal calls for an 80,000-square-foot Zellers, a 40,000-square-foot Extra Foods and other stores and restaurants, all of which are surrounded by parking lots and roads which children as young as five years old will pass through on their way to school.

Now is the time for approving agencies to be certain and decisive with their demands on the developer. It is debatable whether or not the extension of the overpass is needed to ensure safety. But it is incumbent that all parties involved communicate effectively amongst each other and work together to find a solution that is acceptable to all and, most importantly, ensures safety for children.

Call partially restores faith

Last week among the letters to the editor in The Chief, Ann McArthur wrote about young people partying in the area called First Beach. She keeps horses in the area, and didn't have a problem until a party June 25, at which the partying youths trespassed onto her property, lit a couple of huge bonfires, pulled out a fence post and littered the area with beer cans and broken bottles.

She notified the Squamish RCMP, which brought in Squamish Fire Rescue to douse the blazes. Fortunately, McArthur was around to keep her horses away from the problem. Horses running free can be hit by vehicles, and running over broken glass can destroy their hooves, and thus their lives. As McArthur said, she was once a teen herself, but these young people crossed the line.

But to her surprise and delight, she received a call of apology last week from one of the young people involved. It was heartfelt and sincere, she said. With luck and some peer pressure, McArthur's problem won't happen again. And her faith in young people has been partially restored.

Community given a new voice

Gulf Pacific is virtually back to square one with its proposal for a 140,000-square-foot shopping centre along Hwy. 99 at Mamquam Road. Council is expected today (Tuesday) to rescind bylaws which would have allowed the Garibaldi Plaza development to proceed. Council's change of heart was caused by a change in Gulf Pacific's plan.

The original plan called for a 40,000-square-foot Extra Foods store, a Boston Pizza and a number of other smaller retail outlets, as well as a theatre and new building for the Royal Canadian Legion. Improvements in the economy of Squamish, and BCR Properties Ltd.'s 61,400-square-foot Squamish Station retail centre at the corner of Cleveland Avenue and Hwy. 99, as well as an encouraging variety of new stores in the downtown area have changed the picture since Gulf Pacific started work on its project. The developer now plans to replace much of the smaller retail area from the original plan with an 80,000-square-foot Zellers store. There would still be 10,000 square feet of smaller stores and restaurants, but the theatre has disappeared from the new plan.

Council could have allowed Gulf Pacific to simply modify its plans and retain the first three of four readings of the bylaws which would consolidate several parcels of property into the one development. To its credit, council has instead asked the developer to submit a new development plan and go through the process once again.

The original proposal got a rough ride at a public hearing attended by so many people it had to be held in the auditorium at the leisure centre. No doubt the new proposal will draw just as much public interest, as people are already lining up on either side of the issue. And there could be added fire-power to the opposition.

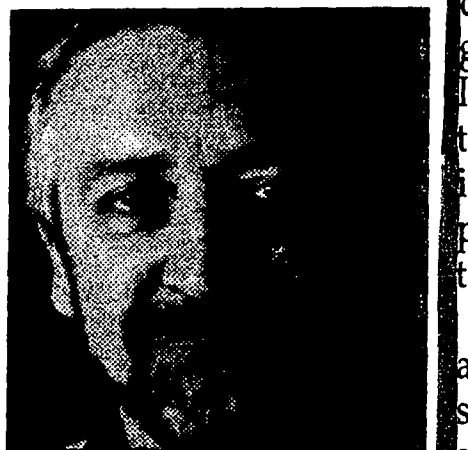

The Mamquam Elementary School parents' advisory council (PAC) is still not satisfied its concerns for the safety of children crossing an entrance to the mall to get to the overpass have been addressed. The overpass is heavily used by extremely young children, and anyone who has children knows a controlled crossing at the entrance is simply not sufficient. The PAC is not opposing the proposed development ing smaller stores and restaurants was intended to pull some of the Whistler-bound traffic off the highway to drop a few dollars in Squamish. It is doubtful any of those people will stop along the way to shop at Zellers.

On the other side of the issue, we can now see how much employment a new shopping centre can provide. At Squamish Station there will be 125 new jobs at A&W and itself, but Gulf Pacific would be well advised to settle this issue and extend the overpass before the public hearing if it wants any support from the community or council.

Owners of a couple of the anchor businesses at Highlands Mall opposed Garibaldi Plaza for obvious reasons. But competition is a fact of business, and those who compete in service, selection and price will survive. All the businesses in Highlands Mall would see improved traffic if the mall owner would spend a few dollars to clean up the place, both inside and out.

But the new proposal could also face opposition from other business sectors as well, as Zellers, a division of the giant Hudson's Bay Co., would provide stiff competition for at least four, fairly large, bargain retailers in the downtown core.

And probably even more important, having a theatre in the neighborhood where there are so many young children was a real selling point for many of the Estates and Highlands residents. That support has likely evaporated.

The original proposal includ-

White Spot alone, never mind the new IGA, Starbuck's and other retail outlets. That is a real boost to the economy, particularly for our young people.

Council will face some tough decisions throughout this new process. But they have started off on the right foot by giving the community a new opportunity to voice its concerns, or its support.

Gulf Pacific supporters have every opportunity to organize their strategy, the same as the detractors obviously will. It is unfortunate those who support a project seldom say anything while those who oppose it are most vocal. At events such as public hearings, that leaves a false impression with the vast majority of those who are undecided.

Let's hope this time everyone is willing to listen, and everyone who has a stake in the proposal, which includes everyone in Squamish, is willing to make their feelings known.

Let's also hope the proposal can be debated on its own merits rather than emotion. Other development proposals have already divided the community more than is healthy.

OCP must have clearly defined rationale

Received by The Chief for publication:

Dear Mayor Lonsdale and councillors,

In addition to the very limited questionnaire which I have filled out, I should like to offer the following comments on the official community plan (OCP) preparation. The OCP is only a useful tool for the community if the council of the day respects the public's wishes. The new OCP should contain language which directs council not to tinker with the OCP for the sake of their own secret agendas or for the benefit of groups who have councillors' private approval. Recent developments in Squamish, especially along Hwy. 99, clearly do not reflect the values expressed in the current OCP when it was first adopted.

Existing statements of public values should be included in the new OCP unless there is a clear public consensus that one or more statements should be removed or amended. Council and administration should not use the preparation of a new OCP to subvert the existing OCP and replace it with one more to their own liking.

Too frequently, changing direction leads to a haphazard, patchwork development. We need to take the time to lay out an overall plan according to a clearly defined rationale. When I look at the way Squamish has been developed to date I don't see a lot of rhyme or reason to it. Why is the so-called industrial park right in the middle of the valley? Why is the airport (landing strip) immediately adjacent to a large and developing residential area? Why is the 7-Eleven and McDonald's development (with a rather goofy access and egress scheme) in the middle of our busiest intersection, on what is proba-

WCWC wants to shut down logging

Editor,

I just received a paper in my mailbox from the Western Canadian Wilderness Committee (WCWC). This organization is dead set to shut down logging in the Squamish area. I wonder if they know that the paper they have used in their propagandistic production comes from trees.

In their paper, they show a picture of a clearcut and slash burn adjacent to the so-called Randy Stoltmann wilderness area, where in fact that fire was caused by a lightning strike. If it were not for the Interfor loggers and the forest service crews putting this out, the whole area which they want protected would have been burned up. Where were the WCWC members?

These people also ask for a donation of $30 to adopt a tree and have your name on it. I understand all the trees have already been named: fir, cedar, hemlock and others.

Would your money not be put to better use by adopting a child in some poverty stricken country?

If these people in the WCWC would get real jobs they could contribute to their own cause and not bum donations off the hard working people of this country.

Explanation needed

Editor,

While reading The Squamish Chief, I've noticed that the people of Squamish are continually voicing their objections to the way council has been running things. There is a special dislike toward the airport decision. I read articles about the airport issue all the time and I can see no good effect for Squamish whatsoever. Many people have voiced their objections, and very few (if any) have voiced their approval.

Why is there no reaction from council to the seemingly endless opposition by the community toward this decision? Is a council elected to reflect the community's view or just their own?

To save the peace, the eagles, and the property value in Brackendale, why not put the new airport downtown in an already industrial area as was also proposed?

My suggestion to council is to publish an explanation — how the pros and cons were weighed. A comprehensive description of everything involved in the decision might help the community of Squamish to better understand why council seems to be ignoring their cries of opposition. I, for one, am dying to understand why this airport is so good for Squamish. Please enlighten me, Squamish council.

bly soon to be a four-lane highway?

The new OCP should seriously address the issue of habitat restoration and enhancement. If you ask professor Carl Walters, he will tell you that the Squamish River system is in a disastrous state. The flood control dikes, along with Hwy. 99 and BCR lines will contribute to the decline and extirpation of fish stocks for the foreseeable future. I expect that we will eventually see a last ditch (so to speak) attempt to manage the fish stocks in order to save them from complete extinction.

Preservation of habitat should also be seriously addressed. This will obviously go hand in hand with the protection of fisheries resources, but a formal plan for the maintenance of green spaces and greenery in general should be part of the new OCP. The district already has information on how this can be accomplished in the material on greenways received as part of The Land for Nature Initiative.

Thank you for your attention, and I look forward to discussing the official community plan with you at future public meetings where back and forth discussion can take place.

Seniors explore housing options

By Ron Enns

With seniors making up the fastest-growing segment of our demography, an increasing availability of housing for seniors in Squamish must follow.

For relatively independent seniors, The Manor in downtown Squamish is a seniors' community of apartment living and the adjacent under-construction Eagle Grove Housing Cooperative will provide condominiums for seniors. At the opposite end of the spectrum, the recently expanded Hilltop House, which is attached to Squamish General Hospital and is operated by the Squamish Health Care Society, provides a place for seniors who require acute and extended care.

But there is really nothing in between for Squamish seniors who may not require extended care, but who have difficulty coping on their own. To explore filling a need that may exist, the district's seniors advisory commission has been examining some housing alternatives.

The seniors advisory commission — which has been established to advise council on various seniors' matters — recently listened to a presentation by Charles Cooper of the St. Margaret of Scotland Society Abbeyfield Housing development in Burnaby.

Abbeyfield houses are family-style homes designed for people who no longer wish to live alone, but still want to maintain their independence. Each of nine to 12 residents has their own private bed-sitting room, and their own furniture. Common living, common dining and recreation areas are available for all residents. Meals are provided daily with the residents preparing breakfast at their leisure. A resident house coordinator responsible for shopping and for food preparation is service. Laundry facilities are provided. However, there is no provision for acute or long-term care.

Abbeyfield houses offer a friendly, supportive atmosphere that aims to balance privacy with companionship and security with independence, said District of Squamish planning director Margaret Thornton, who works with the seniors' advisory commission. She said Abbeyfield houses are for seniors who may now be living in a house or apartment, but have reached the point where living on their own and making meals every day has become troublesome, but they still want some social interaction.

There are several Abbeyfield houses in the Lower Mainland. The concept is more popular in Europe.

The seniors' advisory commission is now working to determine what the demand in Squamish is for an Abbeyfield house.

Police work to resolve youth problems

By Ron Enns

Progress is being made to resolve differences between groups of youths whose differences culminated in a violent fight recently.

Squamish RCMP Cpl. Cliff Doherty two weeks ago facilitated a meeting of the two groups at the leisure centre. About 16 youths — males and females in their late teens and early 20s — and eight parents attended the meeting and had a "frank and open discussion," Doherty said. "There is animosity out there amongst the youth that has to be addressed."

Unfortunately, the animosity has been inflamed by ethnic slurs, however, police investigation has not found that there is underlying racial tension, Doherty said. As well, he said there are no organized gangs in Squamish.

Another meeting is necessary — police are looking for an experienced, neutral facilitator who is used to dealing with youth problems — to get the youths to on their own resolve the problems.

In the interim, Doherty is requesting youths to spread the word amongst their peers to resolve disputes without resorting to violent outbreaks in public.

On an early June evening, a large gathering of youths in the 7-Eleven and McDonald's parking lot turned into a fight in which weapons such as tire irons were used for self-defence.

Torch Run T-shirts on sale

Law Enforcement Torch Run for Special Olympics T-shirts are now available at McDonald's and the Squamish RCMP detachment. As well, people can register at both places to participate in the Sept. 8 run and raise money through pledges. Of course, donations are also accepted, said Const. Jeff Findlay, who is the Squamish RCMP coordinator for the run. Proceeds from the Torch Run go to local and provincial Special Olympics. T-shirts cost $12, to register for the run and receive T-shirts cost $14 and to register for the run along is $4.

A fund-raising car wash will be held at the Squamish Esso July 27.

District responds to Supreme Court petition

By Ron Enns

The District of Squamish has filed an appearance in the Supreme Court of British Columbia in response to a petition by two Squamish residents to quash an official community plan amendment bylaw that is designed to allow development and expansion of the Squamish municipal airport.

The district filed its appearance July 5 in response to the petition filed by Leonard Goldsmith and Thor Froslev June 28. A court date has yet to set in the civil case.

The petitioners are claiming that:

- In amending its official community plan, the District of Squamish failed to provide proper disclosure of documents for the purpose of conducting a public hearing as required by the Municipal Act.
- In amending its official community plan, the District of Squamish exceeded its jurisdiction in that it has no expectation of acquiring the funds necessary to upgrade the Squamish municipal airport in order to effect the airport's expansion as contemplated in the official community plan amendment bylaw.

B.C. Hydro wants water use plan for the Cheakamus

By Loreth Beswetherick

B.C. Hydro is trying to make amends following a report indicating it has been exceeding water diversion limits on the Cheakamus River for almost 40 years.

The company has now organized a public meeting to explain its operations on the river. It also hopes to put together a framework for establishing a water use plan in conjunction with the community and interested stakeholders.

The meeting, to be held July 22 in Squamish, also comes in the wake of compensation demands from a sports-fishing group and a conservation group.

The Steelhead Society of B.C. and the Sierra Legal Defence Fund is calling for B.C. Hydro to pay $15 million in compensation for lost fish production on the river.

The groups allege that illegal diversions by B.C. Hydro and the failure of the comptroller of water rights have had devastating effects on fish populations. They estimate wild pink salmon runs have gone from an estimated 1,000,000 per year to extinction and coho and chinook populations have also been affected.

The society says the $15 million figure is based on the impact on pink salmon only and should be used for Cheakamus River restoration projects.

B.C. Hydro spokesperson Jane Newlands says the Steelhead Society will be informed of the meeting.

"Information will be provided on how the Cheakamus facility has been operated. At the meeting there will also be some information about what the Department of Fisheries and Oceans' monitoring program shows about fish stocks on the Cheakamus since about the 1950s."

Newlands says B.C. Hydro has also done a number of fish studies and will be presenting that information at the open house.

"The idea is to talk about setting up a water use plan in conjunction with the community and other stakeholders."

Newlands says the plan would take into account the electricity needs of British Columbia customers, flood protection and fisheries requirements and other community interests. She says the plan will follow the guidelines of a similar plan set up at the company's Alouette River operation in Maple Ridge which is to be submitted for government approval.

The Sierra Legal Defence Fund has, however, expressed doubts about B.C. Hydro's Alouette operations.

Newlands says B.C. Hydro is proposing the water use plan be submitted to the water comptroller of the water management branch of the Ministry of Environment.

The presentation will be made by Graeme Matthews, project manager for the Cheakamus water licence application and by Bruce Misewich, facilities manager for Cheakamus operation. The Cheakamus task team has also been asked to attend, as well as other stakeholders.

The task team is a community liaison group established by B.C. Hydro with representatives from Squamish, the Squamish Lillooet Regional District, Squamish Nation, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, and the Ministry of Environment plus residents in the upper and lower Cheakamus regions.

The open meeting will be held July 22 from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. in the Mamquam Room of the Sea to Sky Hotel.

Warning issued after B.C. cougar attacks

By Loreth Beswetherick

The Ministry of Environment has issued a wildlife advisory in the wake of two cougar attacks on young children in B.C.

Lance Beingessner, 8, and Christine Frank, 5, are both recovering at B.C. Children's Hospital after being attacked by the large cats.

Lance, of Nakusp, was dragged off a path July 7 in the western Kootenays while he and relatives were playing near their cabin on Upper Arrow Lake.

Christine was attacked earlier while playing with her brother in front of their house on the outskirts of Lytton.

Lance is in serious condition while Christine was said to be in fair condition after suffering massive scalp injuries. The Nakusp cat was shot by conservation officers after it was cornered in a tree.

As of Sunday conservation officers including problem wildlife specialist Dennis Pemble and wildlife contractor Vern Hendricks were still searching for the Lytton cougar.

Squamish conservation officer Dan LeGrandeur says it is safe to assume that anywhere there is a deer, there will be cougars and that includes the Sea to Sky Corridor.

There are approximately 4,000 cougars in the province with the highest concentration in the Kootenays, southern Interior, Vancouver Island and Cariboo regions.

The ministry is urging the public to take extra precautions this summer when hiking in the woods, camping and participating in other outdoor activities but LeGrandeur says there is really not much you can do to avoid an attack.

"There is really nothing proactive you can do with cougars but if you are aware there is a cougar in the area, don't let your children play near a green belt area in your backyard and keep them close to the house.

"It's really tough to see because you don't want to create a state of paranoia but on the other hand there are always going to be cougars and bears around."

LeGrandeur says people should just be aware of the fact they are in a wildlife area.

LeGrandeur says the Sea to Sky corridor has a healthy cougar population and the possibility of an attack is always there. "We have cougars all over the province. What they do is follow the deer population and when the deer move down in winter into the valley bottoms that's when we tend to have most of our problems."

LeGrandeur says conservation officers are keeping an eye on a cougar that has been sighted on occasion in the Alice Lake area. "We also had a sighting of the Green River crossing and we do have another cougar that's hanging around the new site Mount Currie. We've had a number of sightings of that one."

Blackcomb Whistler's ski runs and the upper Squamish Valley also provide ideal habitat for deer and deer population on the mountains is increasing rapidly, which in turn means an increase in cougar population.

"If there is a good deer population there will always be a good cougar population."

Cougars are shy and rarely attack humans. LeGrandeur says the cougar that attacked Lance was young and in poor condition and probably looking for easy prey.

Puppies make emergency call

Police, upon receiving a 911 call in which only the sound of dogs barking was heard, recently attended a Squamish residence. The door of the residence was unlocked, so police proceeded to investigate. The homeowners returned at about the same time and it was discovered that a litter of puppies knocked the handset from the phone and pressed a preprogrammed 911 button on the phone. "We do get some unusual 911 calls, but that is the first time we have had puppies phone us," said Const. Fran Bethell.

Police Blotter

Police on July 6 at about 2 p.m. received a report of an injured hiker about 1 1/2 hours up the trail to the north peak of the Stawamus Chief. Squamish Search and Rescue was deployed. A Canadian Forces Search and Rescue 442 Squadron Labrador helicopter happened to be in the area at the time and offered to assist. The hiker, a 36-year-old Burnaby man, was flown by helicopter to Squamish General Hospital with a possible ankle fracture sustained after a fall on the trail.

Police received a report July 8 that a window at the Anglican church was broken July 8. Vandalism is suspected.

A 14-year-old Squamish girl riding a bicycle sustained bruises and was shaken up after colliding with a car at Highlands Way South and Mamquam Road July 9 around noon. Police said the cyclist cut out in front of the intersection and the driver of the car, a Squamish woman, unsuccessfully attempted to avoid the cyclist. The girl was taken to Squamish General Hospital by a parent. There was $200 damage to the car and $400 damage to the bicycle. Const. Fran Bethell said cyclists should be reminded that they have to obey all the rules of the road. Cyclists should also ensure they are visible and should ride defensively.

Police responded to a report July 8 at about 11:30 p.m. of youths congregating at the skateboard park and throwing rocks and breaking windows at the nearby aquatic centre. Police discovered six males in the area. An 18-year-old Squamish man was arrested. A charge of mischief is being recommended. There was $1,500 damage to the building. Police continue the investigation.

Police received a report July 10 of a Ford Escort that was vandalized and burned just off the Mamquam forest service road near the district chlorine shed. The vehicle was registered to a Squamish business. Police continue the investigation.

Squamish Highway Patrol issued 152 tickets during the provincewide unsafe speed enforcement campaign, June 28 to July 5. Seventy-five of the prosecutions were for speeding and six were for excessive speeding. As well, 23 written warnings were issued. There were three motor vehicle accidents reported by Squamish Highway Patrol, with speed being attributed as a factor in all three. In last year's campaign, there were 10 motor vehicle accidents, with speed being attributed as a factor in one of those.

No damage done W in latest rockfall bla

Fist-sized rocks that fell from the hillside and onto Hwy. 99 south of Shannon Falls the morning of July 9 did not damage any cars or even cause a road closure, according to the Ministry of Transportation and Highways.

The rocks were removed from the road by hand and then heavy equipment was used to clean out the ditch to restore a rock catchment area, said ministry spokesperson Eliah Farrell. However several people report much larger rocks also came down, some as large as two metres in diameter.

No rock scaling or other activity related to the slope above the highway in the area has taken place in the past, Farrell said. She said it is likely the rocks fell as a result of the effect of wind and rain on the rocks, and added that it has been determined that there no more instability in the area.

WCWC campaigns to ban black, grizzly bear hunting

Ministry, conservation group's statistics differ widely

By Loreth Beswetherick

Early August could see wildlife activist Anthony Marr arriving in the Sea to Sky corridor to drum up support for a controversial campaign he hopes will culminate in a provincewide referendum to ban all bear hunting in B.C. — a campaign criticized as using unsubstantiated statistics and misleading video footage to garner support.

If successful, the Western Canada Wilderness Committee will be the first organization in the province to use B.C.'s new Recall and Initiative Act to launch a referendum since it was passed two years ago. The procedure, according to WCWC, is commonly used in the U.S.

"The act is basically the government's permission to let citizens launch a referendum," says chief campaigner Marr. "A few organizations have tried to use it, but they have all failed because of the difficulty in satisfying the government's requirements."

To force the government into a referendum, environmentalists must collect signatures of support for the grizzly and black bear hunt ban from 10 per cent of all registered voters in all of the 75 electoral districts in B.C. within a 90-day period. That would mean about 210,000 signatures.

The 90-day period will officially start Sept. 9 to coincide with the annual fall sport hunt for bears.

Once enough signatures are collected, the WCWC intends to forward the official petition to the Chief Electoral Officer of Elections B.C., who will examine the petition over a 42-day period.

If all legal requirements have been met, the officer will then forward the petition to the legislature, which will have three options: passing a law to ban the sport and trophy hunting of bears, the bill could be introduced but voted down, or the petition could be returned to Elections B.C. for a vote in a provincewide referendum the last Saturday in September 1999.

According to the WCWC, to win the referendum the bear hunting ban must gain the vote of support for more than 50 per cent of B.C.'s registered voters and more than 50 per cent of the registered voters in at least two-thirds of the 75 electoral districts.

But despite the task ahead, Marr anticipates success.

"I'm confident — I'm not projecting ahead, but I'm confident. If we introduce the bill and they vote it down, the campaign would not be finished. In that consequence, it would just heat up. If we have taken the trouble to obtain all those signatures and they just come out and say let's kill it, we won't die."

However area hunters, conservation officers and B.C. wildlife biologists say the WCWC is mounting a campaign that is not based on sound biological reasoning. Squamish conservation officer Steve Jacobi says if there is a ban on black bear hunting in the province, "all I will be doing is wildlife control. I will no longer be doing law enforcement because I will be the one shooting the bears. We will be overrun by black bears."

Local hunting groups also say the area will be overpopulated by black bears.

Marr disagrees. His arguments say B.C. wildlife officials have no idea how many bears are being lost each year. B.C. officials do acknowledge they have no solid figures, but they say the WCWC doesn't either.

"For grizzly bear population in B.C. we have had input from all sorts of sources and the estimates range from 3,000 to 13,000," says Marr. "The larger number is the pro-hunting lobby groups and the B.C. government number. So, we will be generous and take a biased average in their favor, rounding the number off to 10,000."

Marr says that last year, legal grizzly kills were reported to be about 350. He also tacks on an extra 400 kills of garbage bears and estimates that for each bear killed legally, bears in the province and we are losing 4,000 legally. He pushes the number up in excess of 12,000 to account for estimated poaching, road kills and garbage shootings, putting the annual loss at about 10 per cent.

Marr says sustainability for the black bear is eight per cent, after which the population will start to decline.

At these rates, Marr says that within five or six years the grizzly bear will be classified endangered, and so would the black bear in about 10 years.

Jack Evans, senior wildlife biologist for the Ministry of Environment, says we are already overrun by black bears and that hunting is the only real source of mortality for the species.

As for poaching, Evans says no one has a handle on the numbers. "There is a lot of speculation."

Evans also says things should improve with the province's grizzly bear conservation strategy launched last year. "Hunting is now by limited entry. It is a major effort on the part of the wildlife branch in the management and recovery of the grizzly population."

Jacobi says he is aware of local poaching but it is minimal.

"The government files show recorded cases of B.C. poaching are minimal. Either we've got a handle on it or it's going on well behind our back. If we don't really know, the WCWC certainly doesn't know," says Jacobi.

He adds that conservation officers rely substantially on public feedback — and because of the populated nature of the Sea to Sky area and the numbers of responsible hunters and loggers frequenting the area, if poaching was happening, there would be reports made.

Marr, however, alleges poaching is skyrocketing and says banning sport hunting is one way of stabilizing bear populations.

Marr started a campaign around the province June 5 and hopes to reach the corridor in August. He officially signed up local campaign volunteers when he spoke in Whistler in May as a guest of the Jennifer Jones Bear Foundation. Approximately 500 volunteer canvassers have signed up out of a total of 5,000 needed for the campaign to succeed.

"Anyone who has been a resident in B.C. for at least six months, is a B.C. registered voter, and wants to help bears survive, should call us and find out how to help," said Western Canada Wilderness Committee founding director Paul George.

there are one and maybe more poached.

"For argument's sake, we are losing maybe 1,000 to 1,200 a year, which is more than 10 per cent of the population."

"The B.C. government policy, written right into their annual report, is that the government biologists studying the reproductive rate of grizzlies say that any cropping greater than four per cent will be unsustainable. Legal hunting is four per cent already and they just forgot — or deliberately did not take into consideration the poaching numbers."

Marr has a similar argument for the black bears. He estimates there is a population of 120,000 black

North Vancouver artist brings underrated medium directly to Brackendale

By David Donaldson

For creative persons interested in finding new techniques in developing form, the Brackendale Art Gallery is bringing one of B.C.'s most innovative artists to Squamish for a weekend sculpture workshop July 20-21.

In his workshop George Rammell, sculptor and instructor at Capilano College, will be teaching direct plaster modeling and carving in plaster. Traditionally, plaster works are done by modeling a form in clay, making a mould of it, then casting it in plaster. Rammell will demonstrate how to model the plaster directly; participants will start with basic wire forms and build the plaster up over them, ending up with an objective form by the end of the workshop.

"I find it a really interesting process because it's so immediate," Rammell says. "The process of working plaster directly has been ignored somewhat in recent years. It's an old technique that I find really exciting and it's a medium I think people can respond to really well." The advantage of working with plaster is you can add to it easily and you can carve it, and you can observe it from a distance and make alterations.

Rammell devised his direct plaster technique with well-known Haida artist Bill Reid as a way of scaling up Reid's larger projects such as the Black Canoe at the Canadian Embassy in Washington, D.C. But it's not merely a mechanical scaling technique. "We had a basic model to work from and scaled it up while Bill made visual alterations.

"It's a way of building up the form in an immediate way. You can draw really clarified pencil lines on it and remove material easily." The artist provides the vision and Rammell helps him realize it on a large scale.

You don't have to be a prominent artist to appreciate the skills being taught at the workshop. Rammell says people of varied experience and abilities will enjoy the course — somebody right off the street who just wants to indulge in some creative activity or someone with years of sculpture experience who just wants to pick up on a new technique. Participants will gain the experience of learning how to realize a direct plaster work and will have a work of art to take home with them when the workshop is over. Rammell will show slides of his own work and that of other artists who have used this particular approach in the past, historically and contemporary work. For those who really enjoy the form they have conceived and don't want to leave it in plaster, they can make a rubber mould of the work, after which it can be transferred to other material. Basic rubber moulding techniques will be taught at the workshop.

Participants shouldn't show up to the workshop with any preconceived designs or ideas they want to see done in plaster. Rammell will be taking them right through the entire process from initial armature construction in metal to applying the foundation and the skin of the work. "It's better they come with a blank sheet so they respond immediately when they arrive."

Each person will be given a 45 kilogram bag of plaster to work with so they can expect to create some fairly large forms. The workshop will require a commitment to long hours and fine craftsmanship; participants may wish to stay overnight. They are requested to wear old clothes and bring ice cream pails, yogurt containers and old table knives.

By teaching workshops like these and at Capilano College, and working with other well-known artists, Rammell has been able to finance his own major projects ("a lot of my own work isn't financially viable," he says) that are on display in Sweden, France and Alaska. Two years ago he had a show at the Charles H. Scott Gallery in Vancouver but most of his local work is in private collections or in his studio. His preferred medium is granite but he also works in bronze, steel, glass and wood.

Currently Rammell is working on a big project with the working titled Bear Walk. He had an 800 kilogram grizzly bear walk over 17 metres of clay. He made a plaster mould of the bear footprints on a panel and is now working on strategies and preparation for the rubber mould from the plaster.

Taste police needed in Squamish

As Squamish experiences continued rapid growth in the residential and commercial sectors, the need for taste police is greater than ever. What constitutes good taste is, of course, a personal matter. In fact, many would argue that the concept of good taste does not exist because the issue is one of subjectivity and to say one person's taste is better than another's is judgmental and void of objectivity. However, that is not to say that a majority — or at least a representation mirroring Squamish's demography — cannot or should not dictate how this town is to look as it develops.

Currently, the district's planning department can make requests of developers through the development permit process to have commercial buildings designed and built to certain standards. As well, the district's advisory planning commission — made up of a broad cross-section of the community — can make recommendations regarding design. Developers building residential subdivisions can also through covenants ensure houses built in the subdivision are of similar character to maintain a sense of neighborhood design. However, the municipal council — which some would argue is not close to being a true representation of this rapidly changing community — has the authority to decide what it sees fit to do, including ignoring the recommendations of the planning department and the advisory planning commission, as it has done on numerous occasions. As well, council is becoming well known as a pushover when developers request amendments to the official community plan, the plan that was designed by Squamish people as a vision of what they want this community to look like.

And while some Squamish subdivision developers, to their credit, do include restrictive covenants as part of their developments, others do not and are not bound to do so. It is quite obvious where these do not exist (which is most of Squamish) — side by side stand log houses, Spanish villas, California specials, monster homes and virtual boxes.

With the power base geared toward satisfying developers, Squamish sorely needs enforceable design standards to ensure that there is some consistency in development, which should reflect our surroundings.

To our north, Whistler is an example of a planned community with stringent design guidelines. Whistler, however, has special powers because it is not a regular municipality — it is a "resort municipality."

Legislation allows Whistler to be exempt from not being able to impose design guidelines on residential development.

Vancouver and Victoria are also in a different category because they have charters separate from the Municipal Act, the act which dictates that municipalities cannot impose design guidelines on residential development.

There are ways around parts of the Municipal Act, however. Municipalities can pass bylaws to promote good design relating to the proportional amount of area a house is allowed to cover on a lot. Bylaws for larger than usual setbacks can also be written. A good example of this type of design control occurs in West Vancouver.

Surroundings

By Ron Enns

Some Squamish residents are not happy with houses going up in their neighborhoods. They complain of box-like design. In some cases, two-storey side-by-side duplexes are being legally built, but upon closer inspection, it is obvious that the developer intends to create a separate suite downstairs on both sides, effectively building a four-plex. The district's building department has no choice but to approve of the bar sink plumbing downstairs that can later be illegally modified to accommodate a secondary suite, effectively making the house a four-plex. In such cases, the district loses out on collecting additional tax revenue, taxpayers foot the bill for increased garbage pick-up requirements and greater demands on utilities, and other residents in the area have to put up with additional vehicles and noise and a potential decrease in property values.

There is no easy solution to the issue of design guidelines in municipalities like Squamish. It is heartening to see some developers go out of their way to build houses or condominiums that fit into Squamish's spectacular natural setting. Others, though, appear to need the guidance of a design committee or the enforcement of the taste police.

"Fine dining overlooking the spectacular beauty of Howe Sound."

Rammell will also be teaching at NVOs

Projects of this size take considerable time and are highly labor-intensive.

Although he has worked in and taught in many mediums — west coast-style tools, stone carving, andisite carving (all previous workshops at BAG) — Rammell's work has always been concerned around the definition of form.

"Most of my current work provides a visual access to the technique so when the viewer looks at the piece they can see exactly how it was made. There's nothing hidden from the viewer."

In addition to the BAG workshop, Rammell will be among the top Canadian artists teaching at the Artists for Kids program at the North Vancouver Outdoor School this week.

Use your imagination when purchasing a special gift for a close friend. Your thoughtfulness will be duly rewarded.

Gemini (May 21 - June 20)

Give yourself a break and take time off for some fun. There is no reason to be mean to loved ones; they are not responsible for your troubles.

Cancer (June 21 - July 20)

A rush of activity has your head spinning. You can complete everything on time, but you will need some help from a friend.

Leo (July 21 - Aug. 21)

A love relationship may need a little push in the right direction to get things going again. A surprise is on the way.

You have the opportunity to take a few risks right now, and it is a good idea to pursue them. Stretch your wings and fly.

Capricorn (Dec. 21 - Jan. 19)

Health concerns should be at the top of your list. Exercise and a restricted diet should be in your daily regime.

A kennel full of darts to all those who exercise their dogs by hauling them on a rope behind their bicycle. This is cruel. I've seen poor dogs being forced to run faster than is comfortable for them, with their tongues lolling out. Have some thought for the well being of your animal, please. If you can't be bothered to walk it, try to get someone else to take it out. If you can't, then maybe you shouldn't have a dog in the first place.

Darts to the organizers of a retirement party who forgot to invite the guest of honor. Luckily, she was found at the last minute after activities had begun, and was able to enjoy a grand send-off.

A bus full of beautiful daffodils to Elaine Ramsay for all the time and effort she has put in to make the seniors' bus trips so enjoyable.

A school full of daffodils to Peter Hotson, Rose McKenzie and Grace Halvorson for the support, encouragement and help in enabling us to start and maintain our own Squamish chapter of CHADD Canada support group. We parents are grateful for the strength we receive each meeting.

Fingers full of very sharp darts to those who have been lifting the Canadian Diabetes Association's coin boxes from some of the merchants' counters. This is a volunteer organization. Just remember, one day you may find yourself with diabetes and want our help.

Daffodils to Rob Smith for supporting the Squamish chapter of CHADD and for helping us with our professional advisory board. Also daffodils to those who faithfully attend our meetings, adding smiles and support to our group.

One hundred saddles full of daffodils to Rae and Tiffany at Red Wind Trail Rides for putting on such an eventful birthday party. Even a campfire for roasting hot dogs and marshmallows. Wow. Mom had lots of fun too. Thanks to Jessica for showing us your petting farm. Many thanks. Cindy and Mandy.

Daffodils to Mike Jensen's dedication to the Lions Club's 1959 Thunderbird car raffle project. The Lions Club president gave up an entire long weekend for Lionism. Car raffle proceeds go to Camp Squamish, where children with disabilities enjoy their summer activities every year.

Blooming yellow daffodils to Jeevan Kaila for bringing up her uncomfortable graduation prom feelings. All daffodils to all the volunteers who worked so hard to get everything together. Don't let one of your committed members' attitudes dampen your community service spirit. A piece of advice to that member, please don't spoil the dedication of volunteerism with your biased attitude toward another culture.

Mirrors full of daffodils to the guys at Fast Glass. Your service and help are very much appreciated, from grateful Corvette owner.

An Easter Seal Camp and little brown church overflowing with daffodils to the great people who made our wedding day extra special: John for the touching ceremony; Simone for the beautiful music; Ruth and Ev for the alter flowers so carefully chosen to match the lovely arrangements made by Lynn; Annette for the delicious cake; Michelle for the extra touches to the wine; Dave, Debbie and your great staff (especially the cooks) for a superb reception; Leeza and Craig for the time off; Brenda and Brian for working the extra shift; Karen for arranging the perfect wedding night and an unforgettable honeymoon; and a special thank you to all our relatives and friends for giving us your love and support. Many, many thanks.

Daffodils to Raj Kahlon of the Squamish Lions Club for selling the most Thunderbird tickets this week. Also daffodils to Squamish Ford, especially Rachelle, for looking after "Mother." Mother is the restored 1959 Thunderbird which is being raffled. Thanks also to all at Squamish Ford who are looking after Mother.

A hanging basket full of darts to the person who stole my hanging basket from my townhouse. I have lost a faith in human society from your actions. You had to come onto my property to steal this beautiful colorful basket. To all of you who spend a lot of money each spring and summer to beautify your home with hanging baskets, be sure to wire them to the hook and bring the planters in at night. To the thieves, please make sure you water my basket twice a day and fertilize once a week.

A large bouquet of daffodils to McDonald's and Sea to Sky Hotel for supplying the July slo-pitch tournament with ice.

Daffodils to the District of Squamish for the beautiful hanging baskets on Cleveland Avenue, and to the staff who water and care for them. They really make the downtown more attractive.

Small businesses invited to join trade mission to Japan

The Kansai region of Japan is the size of the B.C. Lower Mainland, but its population exceeds 21 million. On its own, the region's economy ranks among the world's seven leading nations — twice that of South Korea, almost the same as Canada's, and three per cent of the world's total. It is the air and sea gateway to Asia — the Pacific Rim's closest trade and investment market to Western Canada.

Based around the three major cities of Osaka, Kyoto and Kobe, Kansai is home to a wide range of industries including textiles, foods, electric appliances, metals, housing, biotechnology, pharmaceuticals and chemicals and related services. It is focus of an earthquake rebuilding project worth in excess of $300 billion.

From Oct. 21-23, its the host of the Global Business Opportunities Convention — Asia's most important business-to-business trade show arranged with small business in mind.

The World Trade Centre and the chambers of commerce of Western Canada, invite all interested small business to join them on a small business trade mission which offers the most effective entry into Japanese markets at the lowest costs.

Squamish cyclists gear up for Trek '96

Two Squamish residents are putting their wheels in motion by preparing for British Columbia Lung Association's 200-kilometre Bicycle Trek for Life and Breath, Sept. 7-8.

Trek fills up every year and Squamish cyclists Ken McDowell and Chris Pereverzoff have registered early to have more time to collect the minimum $375 required in donations before the trek.

They will be among 300 cyclists taking a leisurely ride through the Fraser Valley and northwestern Washington state. The two-day trek offers cyclists scenic country roads, an overnight stay at Cultus Lake, and lots of fun.

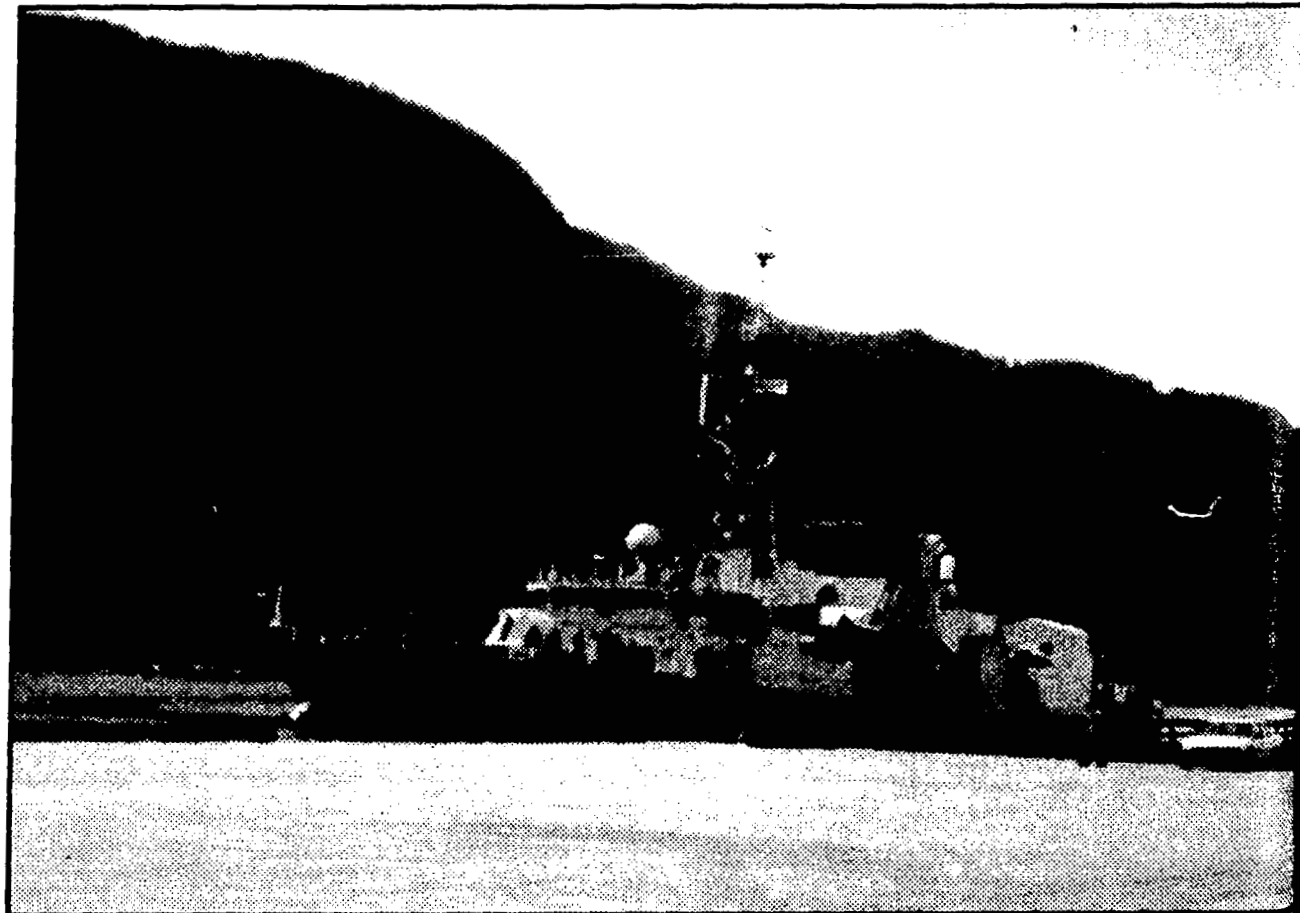

The fund-raising goal for the 12th annual Trek is $285,000 to help fund medical research, lung health education and other association programs in B.C.

Chamber News

The package includes airfare, taxes, transfers, accommodation, shuttle service, convention visitor's pass, access to all convention seminars, workshops, receptions and events, in-depth briefings by Canadian trade officials, networking receptions and dinners and translation services.

The package price is $2,824. For more information call Wendy Magee, manager of the Squamish and Howe Sound Chamber of Commerce office at 892-9244, or Todd Coupal of the Vancouver Board of Trade at 641-1205.

Delegates from the recent Kansai-Canada West Business Forum board the HMCS Vancouver at Squamish Terminals for a display of Canadian marine technology and a return trip to Vancouver.

Trekkers, on their own or part of a team, earn incentives for fund-raising beyond the minimum requirement. Prizes include mountain bikes, cycling clothing, resort packages, ski passes, fitness gift certificates, four-week wine making kit, and two tickets to a European or Caribbean destination from Air Canada.

Trekkers receive meals, refreshments, and accommodation and entertainment at Cultus Lake. The Lung Association transports sleeping bags and personal gear and provides detailed maps and mechanical support en route. When it is all over, trekkers are invited to celebrate their achievements at a free wrap-up party in November.

For information or to register, call the Lung Association's trek department at 1-604-731-5864 or toll-free 1-800-665-5864.

Variation on traditional pizza

Pizza is a very old food. It seems to date from the era when the Greeks settled southern Italy.

Innovative bread bakers, they taught the Romans the secrets of their trade.

Ancient historians describe pizza then as a flat bread covered with a topping of cheese, herbs and olive oil. The word pizza comes from Greek and refers to the dark ashes from the ovens left on the bottom of the crust.

It took another 2,000 years for pizza to become a common dish in Naples.

By the mid-1700s, Italian cooks were experimenting with the tomato from Peru and Mexico (it only took them 150 years to lose their suspicions about tomatoes).

The chemistry of tomato and dough clicked and pizza became incredibly popular.

Pizza's shape was also subject to change. Calzone is a folded, turnover-shaped pizza whose name means pant leg. It's likely the Italians christened this savory package of filling a calzone after the billowy trouser legs favored by Neapolitan men in the 18th and 19th centuries. Folded pizza was something new then.

The calzone is clearly a close kin of the legendary pie, though it does depart from its better-known relative in one point — where southern Italians believe pizza tastes better eaten from the hand, a calzone calls for a knife and fork.

It promises more filling than pizza, a plus for those with appetito grande.

let rise at room temperature for about 1 1/2 hours. Make the filling while the dough rises.

Calzone Pugliesi

2 Tbsp. olive oil
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 cups canned Italian plum tomatoes, well-drained
250 grams Mozzarella cheese, diced
1/4 cup freshly grated Parmesan
8 fresh basil leaves, minced (or 1 tsp. dry, crumbled)
1 egg beaten with 1 Tbsp. water (for sealing dough)
Heat the oil, gently fry the garlic for a few minutes, until fragrant but not colored. Dice the tomatoes, making sure they are drained as well as possible. Combine the cheeses, basil, oil and garlic. Stir in the tomatoes. Season with a few grinds of pepper.

Punch down the dough. Cut it into 4 pieces. Knead into balls, then roll out into 10-inch circles. Cover lightly with plastic wrap and let rest for 30 minutes.

Heat oven to 450 degrees. Mound about 1/2 cup filling in the middle of each round, leaving a one inch border.

Brush the edges with beaten egg. Fold dough over to cover filling. Press edges together to seal. Place calzone on an oiled baking sheet (a baking stone works best if you have one).

Bake on the lowest rack for about 20 to 25 minutes, until brown and puffed. Cool on a rack for 10 minutes before serving.

Sausage Calzone

4 links sweet or hot Italian sausage
3 Tbsp. olive oil
4 medium red bell peppers, thinly sliced
3 medium onions, thinly sliced
Fry the sausages until browned and cooked through. Cut into 1/4 inch slices. Drain the fat from the skillet, add the olive oil, peppers and onions. Cook slowly over medium-low heat until lightly brown and soft, about 20 minutes. Stir in the sausage slices. Season to taste with salt and pepper (add some hot pepper flakes for a spicy filling).

Cool before filling the calzone.

Roll out the dough, fill and bake as in the preceding recipe.

Calzone Dough

1 Tbsp. dry active yeast
1 cup lukewarm water
2 Tbsp. olive oil
2 1/2 to 3 cups flour
1 1/2 tsp. salt
Sprinkle the yeast over the water and let stand for 5 minutes, until foamy and puffed up. Stir in the oil and salt.

Pour into a large bowl. Beat in the flour a bit at a time, until a soft dough forms. Turn onto a floured surface and knead until smooth and elastic, about 10 minutes on average.

Place in an oiled bowl, cover with plastic wrap and

Next seniors' trip to the PNE

Branch #70 News

Our next bus trip is to the PNE on Aug. 28. I believe this is filled, but check with Elaine. This is a seniors day at the PNE, and if I can get any information on special events for that day I will let you know.

The city centre bus trip on Sept. 10 promises to be a good one. Our first stop is at Cypress lookout for a picnic. Then we will drive through Stanley Park (Second and Third Beach area), and on to Granville Island for lunch (on your own). They have many food outlets to choose from. From there we will be taken to the Queen's Park Conservatory, and a tour through Chinatown, Gastown and on to the east side of Stanley Park on our way to the North Shore, stopping at Yic's for supper.

The cost of the trip which includes the bus fare, admission to the conservatory, and dinner at Yic's will depend on the number of people going. If there is a full bus (45) the cost will be $35, if there are fewer passengers the cost could be more. Please phone Elaine at 898-5463 for more information.

Over the Hill

Tickets for the PNE trip must be paid for by the end of July so arrangements can be finalized.

The whale watching trip to Vancouver Island is a three-day trip Oct. 1-3 and includes two nights in Campbell River. Bus trips take a lot of organizing. Deposits have to be made and cancellations in a required time, so if you are interested in any of the above, phone Elaine.

Tantalus Seniors Centre News

Where are our seniors? We have been discussing a new seniors complex for the past few years, with many turning out of the various meetings and surveys.

We have a temporary centre in the old B.C. Hydro building and people are not supporting it.

Trying to find people to host just four hours a week seems almost impossible. The centre is open Monday to Friday, 1-4 p.m. Closed weekends and holiday. Mondays, join the craft ladies for a relaxing afternoon. Bring your knitting or work with us on a project. Tuesdays the crib club is still continuing over the holidays at 1 p.m. sharp.

Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays we are still looking for some new programs, so if you have any suggestions, please give me a call at 898-3749.

Any day you are welcome to come in for a cup of tea or coffee and a place to relax.

Get well wishes go out to hospital patients Dorothy Chapman and Ray Miles and convalescing at home, Dorothy Hobby and Carol Carmichael.

Condolences to the family of Vi Binning, who passed away last week.

Kahlon awarded highest Lions Club honoAr

By Al Price

The entire Squamish Lions Club was excited in May when long-time member Raj Kahlon was given the Melvin Jones Fellowship award, the highest honor possible, by the Lions Clubs International Foundation. The Melvin Jones Fellowship honors Melvin Jones, founder of Lions Clubs International.

"When you do things for the community, there are always good feelings in the end," said Kahlon, who has been in the Squamish Lions Club for seven years and owns True Value Hardware. He is also active with the Squamish Hospital Foundation and sits on the advisory planning commission for the District of Squamish.

During his time with the club, Kahlon has served as a member, vice-chair, chairman and for the past year was zone chairman of clubs from West Vancouver through Pemberton, part of what is known as the "multiple district" of Lions clubs in B.C., Montana, Idaho, Washington state and Oregon. Along with the Melvin Jones Fellowship, he was honored for his work in the district. Now that a new zone chairman is in place, Kahlon is working on a variety of projects with his fellow Squamish Lions Club members, including the raffle of a restored 1959 Ford Thunderbird, and is chairing the Lions committee which is bringing the Maple Leaf Choirs to Squamish to perform for senior citizens and Hilltop House residents free of charge.

"All the service clubs do a lot of good in the community," said Kahlon. "If the taxpayers had to pay for what the Lions, Kiwanis, Rotary and all the others do, it would be a lot of money. You do feel good when you work on volunteer activities and community service, and in the Lions Club we always have fun when we are doing things. It is really enjoyable."

As with most service clubs throughout North America, the Squamish Lions Club has seen its membership drop somewhat in recent years, as people have less free time and more choices of things to do. But he said his awarded has boosted club morale, as has the return of summer and the steady stream of people using Camp Squamish.

Camp Squamish, on Government Road in Brackendale, is one of three camps operated by the Lions Society of B.C., (the others are at Shawnigan Lake and Winfield) funded by all Lions clubs in the province. From May to September, a staff of 35 programmers and counsellors work with seven camps of 80-90 physically disabled young people per camp for five or six days per camp of summertime activities.

"The kids have a lot of fun and they really feel needed," said Kahlon, who joined other Squamish Lions at the camp's open house over the weekend. "You can see a different look in their eyes when they're here. They really feel valuable, and they take that home with them."

Last week, the camp hosted 85 kids with physical disabilities in an integrated camp, meaning their siblings could be with them in camp activities, which also gave their parents a much needed break.

In addition to supporting the camps, Squamish Lions participate in sponsoring blood donor clinics, make financial contributions to the Eye Bank, collect eyeglasses for First Sight, contribute to the Heart Fund, award annual bursaries to students of Howe Sound Secondary Kahlon said he loves the way Lions Club members work together, and work on a variety of projects at one time.

"It is nice to be recognized like this, but the real satisfaction comes from helping the community. And 100 per cent of the funds we raise go to good causes. Members pay the cost of administration, and every penny of fund-raising goes to charitable causes. I would like to see many more people doing volunteer work for many worthwhile groups in Squamish, and of course we always welcome new members ourselves."

Measles vaccination clinics extended

A one-time-only province-wide measles immunization program for children aged 19 months to 18 years has been extended to the end of July, provincial health officer Dr. John Millar said Wednesday.

"We want to give parents one last opportunity to make sure their children, particularly children under the age of five, get the critical second dose of the measles vaccine," said Millar.

Since April 1, when the program began, more than 677,327 children in British Columbia have received the second dose at special clinics. This includes 86 per cent of all school-aged children but only 78 per cent of all preschoolers (children aged 19 months to five years).

There have been 36 cases of measles in B.C. so far this year, compared to 10 for the entire year last year. Public health officials are concerned about measles outbreaks because the disease is highly infectious, while its effects are usually mild, it can cause infections and pneumonia, and, in a small number of cases, inflammation of the brain and even death.

Parents should contact their local health unit immediately for times and locations of clinics for children aged 19 months to five years or for older children who may have missed the school clinic. The measles-rubella vaccine used in the provincial immunization program is considered very safe.

Annual Parks Day festivities Saturday at Alice Lake

Parks Day, to be held Saturday, July 20 at Alice Lake Provincial Park, is an annual nationwide celebration of Canada's parks, held on the third Saturday of July. A multitude of special events are held in parks across Canada.

Organized by parks staff and contractors, interested organizations and supportive private enterprises, these events have taken the form of such things as in-park concerts, exhibits, special nature walks, conservation projects, and more.

Objectives:

To focus public attention on natural heritage conservation in Canada and on the particular importance of national, provincial and territorial parks.

- To provide an opportunity for all park constituents to participate in the celebration of parks.

- To increase public awareness of, and support for parks.

Events at Alice Lake:

Parks Day events at Alice Lake Provincial park will include traditional games and races and old fashioned fiddle music and dancing. The games and races will take place in the afternoon from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. There will be the traditional three-legged and potato sack races as well as a less traditional (but no less fun) balloon toss and family jumpworm race.

All participants will be eligible for

In addition to the races, there will be face painting, a Jerry the Moose photo booth and fun fair games such as ball and ring toss. Croquet sets will be available for use.

Starting at 7:30 p.m. and continuing until dusk, special guest Marion Rose will lead an evening of live fiddle music and old fashioned country dancing. Marion has dances which are fun for everyone from three-year-olds to grandparents. No experience is necessary as the dances are easily learned and taught on the spot.

All events are sponsored by B.C. Parks and are free for participants. Everyone is welcome.

Youngsters at the annual Parks Day celebrations at Alice Lake have even more fun when their parents get involved in competitions such as the sack race. Chief file photo

Campers urged to reserve campsites in advance

The Ministry of Environment, Lands and Parks is urging campers to use the Discover Camping reservation system to book their vacation now, while campsites are still available.

The toll-free reservation system will shut down for the season Sept. 15 and provincial campgrounds will begin closing in late September, Environment, Lands and Parks Minister Paul Ramsey said Friday.

The Discover Camping reservation system, which has been in operation for four months, has exceeded all expectations for usage. It has resulted in 27,000 reservations in the 42 provincial parks participating in the program since it was put in place in March.

Of the reservations booked, 78 per cent are from B.C., with the remainder from outside the province, primarily Alberta.

"The overwhelming success has proven extremely valuable in identifying how the system can be improved," said Ramsey.

"In response to this demand, additional lines have been added to handle the volume of calls and operators are now also providing information for campers on alternative sites when a preferred campsite is not available."

For the coming August long weekend (B.C. Day Aug. 5), the campsites in the following participating parks are sold out: Alice Lake, Cultus Lake, Fintry, Gordon Bay, Herald, Manning, Porpoise Bay, Rath Trevor Beach, Shuswap Lake, Bear Creek, Ells Park, Golden Ears, Haynes Point, Sasquatch, Miracle Beach, Porteau Cove, Rolley Lake, Kikomun Creek (Surveyor Lake), Okanagan Lake (South Park).

In the coming months, the ministry will be working with B.C. Tel Interactive as well as other private, federal and public sector representatives to determine what additional steps can be taken to further improve the reservation system for next spring.

Not all campsites in B.C. parks are on the Discover Camping reservation system. On average, 50 per cent of sites within the 42 participating parks will be set aside for reservation. Remaining campsites in these parks be available on a first-come, first-served basis. An additional 123 provincial park campgrounds will also continue to offer camping opportunities on a first-come, first-served basis.

To make a reservation, campers can call toll-free 1-888-9025 from anywhere in North America from 8 to 6 p.m., seven days a week. If a caller has trouble getting through to an operator, B.C. Parks recommends calling at non-peak hours, between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. or on a Saturday or Sunday when lines are not as busy. A message can also be left at the same number after 6 p.m. to cancel a reservation.

Extra caution should be taken during outdoor activities in known cougar habitats

With the increase in the number of cougar sightings, the Ministry of Environment, Lands and Parks is urging the public to take extra precautions this summer when hiking in the woods, camping and other outdoor activities.

There are approximately 4,000 cougars in British Columbia with the highest concentrations in the Kootenays, Southern Interior, Vancouver Island and Cariboo regions of the province.

These shy and elusive animals rarely attack humans. In the past 50 years, five people in the province have died from cougar attacks and approximately 26 people have been attacked.

If a cougar is encountered, it will likely retreat away. However, as a precaution, certain procedures should be followed:

- Do not run or turn your back on a cougar.
- Give the cougar a clear path to escape, always walk and know where it is.
- Pick up small children.
- Raise your arms to look big.
- Act aggressively and throw sticks and rocks into the cougar's face.

Cougars are most active from dusk until dawn when they hunt for food. Cougars primarily prey on deer. They also feed on elk, raccoons, rabbits, beaver, grouse, occasionally livestock and household pets. Male cougars mark their territories by spraying and piling dirt in mounds.

Problem cougars are typically identified by public tips, but not every tip leads to a cougar. Conservation officers pursue a tip if it is determined that a cougar is threatening livestock or human safety. In ideal settings, cougars may be relocated. The appropriate action depends on the threat to public safety, the nature of the complaint and the health of the animal.

Squamish athletes make tracks to Kootenays for B.C. Summer Games

by David Donaldson

Some of our best young athletes have a golden opportunity to make Squamish a sports town to be reckoned with when they go to the B.C. Summer Games in Trail and Castlegar July 25-28. Four members of the track team made the North Shore zone team and have been training with the NorWesters track club in West Vancouver in preparation for the Games. Ian Preston, 14, is excited to be competing in the high jump. "I think it's going to be quite fun," said the first-time Summer Games competitor. "I did quite well in the school track (meets) so I thought I'd try out for the Games and made the team."

He said going against older kids made the tryouts hard but after not making the cut in javelin, shot put or long jump, he was able to beat them out in high jump. "I guess I have a natural ability for it." Preston has been competing in track and field for two years but didn't get serious until this year. Training with the NorWesters has been a positive experience. He says the coaches are really helping him improve and the other athletes in the club are very supportive. Representing Squamish in the Summer Games has Preston "a little nervous. It's going to be a bit hard because I might have family there watching me, so that's going to make me a bit more nervous." Lisa Puchmayr is demonstrating real bravery in taking on the pentathlon — an event she's never competed in before. This event will have her doing high jump, long jump, shot put, 80m hurdles and an 800m run. The 15-year-old feels confident in her abilities to perform the long jump and hurdles and is getting a boost in the other areas in her twice-weekly practices with the NorWesters. "It's a lot of fun and I'm learning a lot from them."

She has been competing in track events since elementary school but didn't start training seriously until her Grade 8 year. This will be her first time competing in the Summer Games.

Sabrina Mattson is "really nervous" about her first time at the Games. The 14-year-old will be competing in the 300m hurdles and the long jump. She only started these events this year but took to them naturally.

"The tryouts were really easy," she said. Mattson believes the competition she will face is going to be tough — but she's ready for it.

Laurie Aseltine, also of the BSS track team will be competing in shot put, discus and javelin, and two swimmer from the Squamish Pirates, Erin MacNamara and Catherine Dworak, will be going to the Games as well.

"Considering the facilities we have here in Squamish the track athletes do very well," said Vic Puchmayr, Lisa's father. He says the excellent coaching and facilities in West Vancouver have really helped Lisa. "It's amazing watching Lisa's hurdles and high jump improve after just a few day's coaching there."

Although he knows the local track coaches do the best they can, he would like to see more experienced parental volunteers and better facilities in Squamish to realize the exceptional potential he sees in our young athletes.

Cactus Cup stage race to bring more than 1,000 riders to Whistler

by Rahoul Ghose

The course for Sunday's cross country stage race during the 1996 Specialized Cactus Cup on Blackcomb Mountain July 26-28 was still up in the air as of last weekend.

Race organizers, impressed by the course used for last month's Volvic B.C. Cup race, were considering using the same route for the Cactus Cup final.

Designed and built by local Whistler Off-Road Cycling Association gurus Dale Douglas and Keith Simmonds, the course included several new patches of single track out on Blackcomb Mountain and routed riders under the Blackcomb Way overpass via a precarious set of stairs — riders descending the staircase would parallel riders ahead of them who ascended the same staircase.

However, as the B.C. Cup course will also be used for August's Tim Horton's Canadian National Championships, local riders are hoping to alter the course for some variety, Simmonds said.

Sunday's course is expected to mirror last year's Cactus Cup in at least one respect — racers will likely be negotiating an inside passage through the Essentially Blackcomb store again this year.

Cactus Cup organizers are expecting more than 1,000 riders to compete in this year's multi-discipline race.

The Cactus Cup stage format puts riders through five separate and unique disciplines over three days, with race categories offered for first-timers, beginners and sport class riders as well as expert and pro riders.

Events include a time trial, the Fatboy criterium through the cobbled streets of Whistler Village, a dirt criterium, a dual slalom on Blackcomb Mountain and a final 40-kilometre cross country circuit race. Overall winners are decided on the points total from four events with the dual slalom being operated as a stand-alone event.

Last year's overall pro winners in the Whistler event, North Vancouver's Alison Sydor and Victoria's Andreas Hestler, started this year's Cactus Cup circuit in Scottsdale, Arizona in winning form, taking the top pro spots amongst a record high field of more than 3,000 riders. Participation at the Arizona event doubled over last year.

However, neither are expected to compete in Whistler this weekend as both should be racing for Canada in the Summer Olympics set to begin two days after the Cactus Cup.

Squamish riders competing in the race include Dave Heisler, Warren Scott, Brennan Covey, Armand Hurford, Scott Rattray, Grant Martin, Al Ross, Calvin Biederdorf and last year's fifth-place finisher Scott Ross, who says he'll take first place this year.

Cactus Cup competition will kick off Friday morning with an eight-kilometre time trial for pros and expert riders set for 8 a.m.

Pros and experts will swap the knobby tires for a set of slicks Friday evening for the Fatboy criterium through Whistler Village on a 0.4-kilometre circuit. Race time is 6 p.m.

Saturday's events include a dirt criterium with first-timers stepping into the pedals at 8 a.m. Pro, elite and expert women hit the course at 2 p.m. while the pro and expert men are set to start at 2:45 p.m.

An open dual slalom event will run from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. with finals scheduled for 7 p.m.

The Cactus Cup wraps up on Sunday with the final cross country stage featuring the expert, pro and elite riders on the course starting at 1:15 p.m. Both men and women competitors in those categories must complete six laps of the course. Sport class riders will complete four laps, general and beginner categories three laps and first-timers two laps during morning races.

The Cactus Cup has gone global for 1996 adding dates in France, Japan and Brazil to events staged in the U.S. and Canada.

The Whistler three-day race will require 100 to 120 volunteers for course marshalling, safety and race control with several shift options open to those interested.

Volunteers are still needed for the event. Anyone interested should contact Tes Sewell at 938-7574.

Mountain Building beats Whistler in ladies fastball playoffs

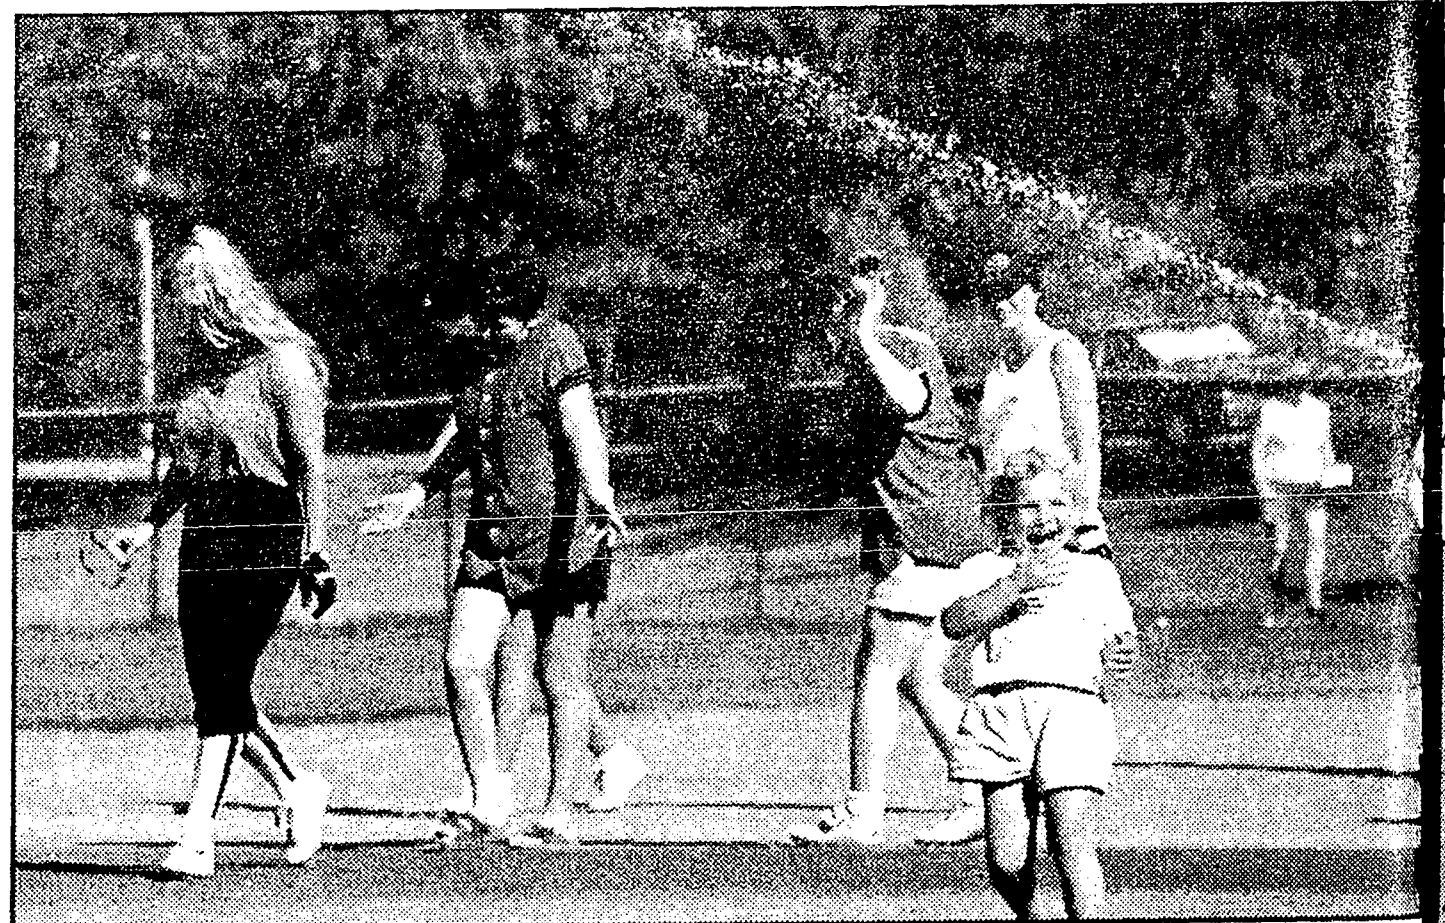

By David Donaldson

Mountain Building Centres was able to hold league champion Whistler Physio Flyers to four runs to win the Howe Sound Ladies Fastball playoffs 6-4 in the final game Saturday at Centennial Field.

Both teams scored all their runs within the first three innings but tightened their defences afterwards and were unable to nail any good hits into the outfield.

Whistler's third baseman had to leave the game halfway through, earning Squamish an automatic out for each Whistler at-bat and leaving the Flyers with only two outfielders. This didn't make much of a difference at the plate for Squamish, however, because "once she left we never hit the ball into the field," said Squamish player Paula Marini. Mountain Building's star player, second baseman Kim Banting was instrumental in holding Whistler in the last innings. "She gets everything — she's phenomenal in the runs she kept them from scoring."

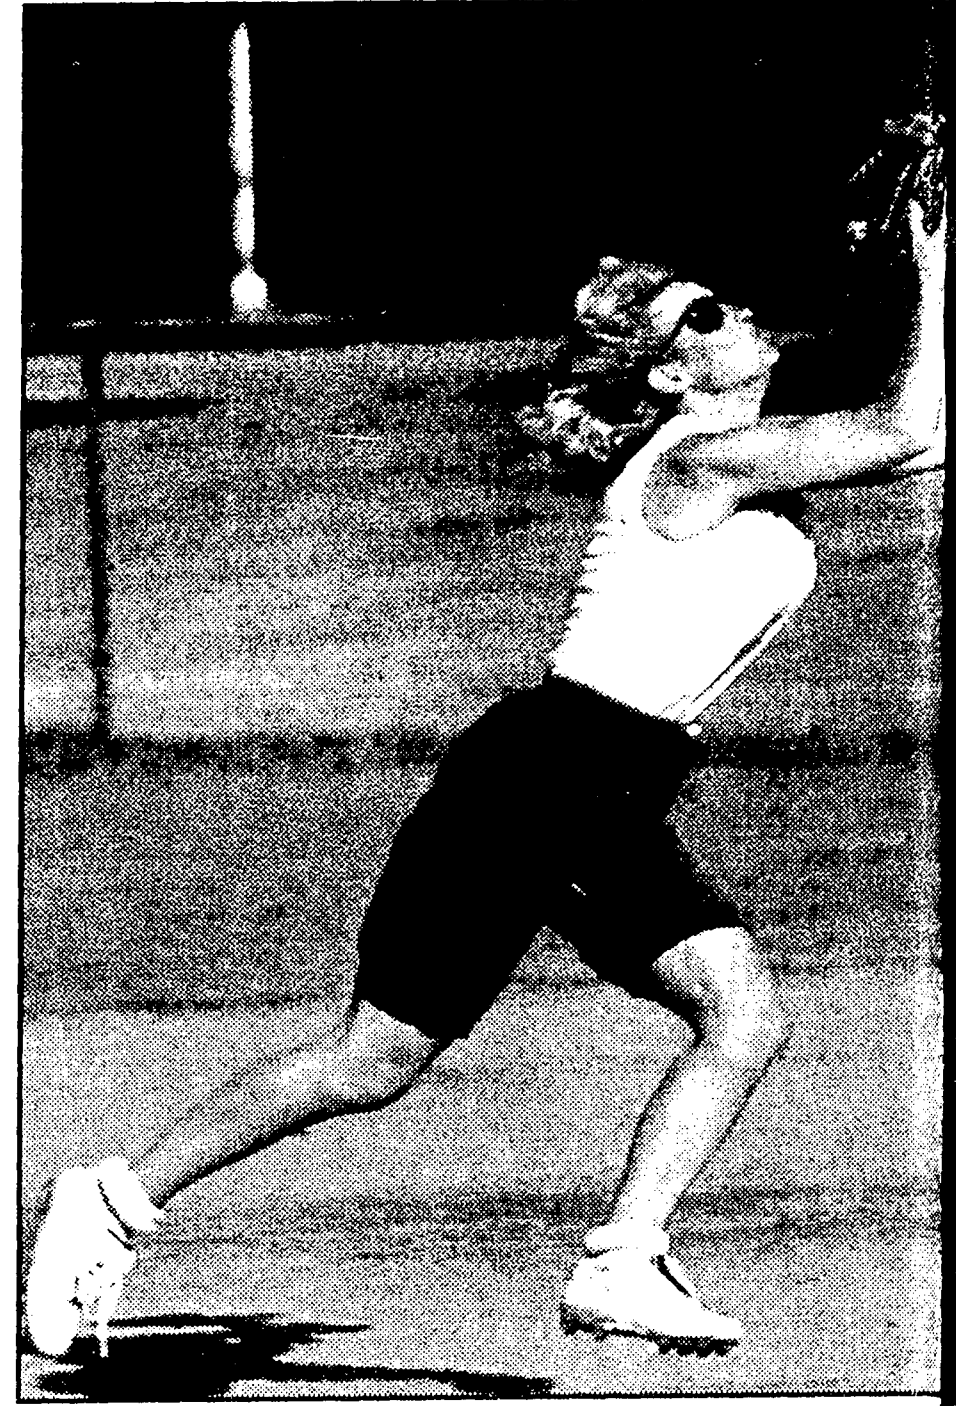

The 6-4 win was one of the lowest scoring games of the day-long playoffs, played in blistering, record-breaking heat. It didn't bother the playoff champs though. "On the second team likes it but the Spars can't handle it," Marini even joked.

The day began with the Squamish Spars beating Mountain Building 5-3 but losing to Whistler 14-0 and finally being knocked out by Mountain Building 19-8 in a finish in third place. Belanger Loading was fourth, losing to Whistler 16-5 and Mountain Building 14-9.

Local canines compete with other top dogs in Lower Mainland's largest flyball tournament

Sea to Sky Canine Club hopes to have two flyball teams for next event

The Sea to Sky Canine Sports Club was one of 25 teams from as far away as Vernon, Victoria and Bellingham competing at the NAFA Flyball Tournament at the Lonsdale Recreation Centre in North Vancouver July 7.

More than 150 dogs were divided into four divisions based on estimated team time so teams can race against others of similar speed. Many teams in the faster divisions are made up of border collies which are known for their speed at this game. The Sea to Sky Chiefs doesn't have a border collie on its team but there are a couple on the sidelines learning.

The Chiefs were seeded fourth. "On the second-fastest division even though the dogs had never raced together as a team; two of them, Jan Rutherford's Australian cattle dog Alice and Shelley Chalmers's yellow Labrador retriever Candy, never having even competed. Both dogs ran flawlessly, earning them more than enough points to put an FD title after their names.

Other team members included Larry Jantz with his mixed breed Kahla, Lorraine Willgress with her chocolate Labrador retriever Mocha FDX, Maren Bruun with her Australian shepherd Josie FDX and Karen Yaremewich with her Australian shepherd Lacey FDCh. The team didn't place against the nine others in the division but the handlers were happy with the way they worked together as a team and with the performance of their dogs and boxloader Cathy Spratt on such a hot and hectic day at the biggest flyball tournament ever in the Lower Mainland.

The Sea to Sky Canine Sports Club hopes to have enough dogs to enter two teams at the next flyball tournament at the end of September. Dogs of any breeding, size (small dogs are especially encouraged), speed or age wanting to get out and have fun, bring your owners. If you can retrieve a tennis ball you can learn flyball. For more information phone Maren at 898-4778 or drop by and watch a practice at the Loggers Sports Grounds Thursday evenings at 6:30 p.m.

DISTRICT OF SQUAMISH ENACTS STAGE 2 OF THE WATER SHORTAGE RESPONSE PLAN

Effective July 12, 1996 the Public Works Department is advising that the District of Squamish must enact Stage 2 of the Water Shortage Response Plan. This is based on increased water use in the recent warm weather.

Lawn irrigation is prohibited in all areas of the municipality. Newly planted turf areas are excepted but you must have a permit from the Public Works Department. There is no charge for the permit.

The District of Squamish relies on two surface water sources for our water. Over consumption results in the potential to exceed our licence which carries potential charges under the Provincial Water Act and Federal Fisheries Act. Any fines imposed by these agencies would be recovered through the water utility which would have a direct influence on our water rates.

Council has the authority to restrict water use under the Water-Use Bylaw.

Residents will face charges for infractions of the Bylaw.

The District of Squamish is currently exploring groundwater sources to supplement our surface sources. We anticipate that production wells will be installed in 1997.

For more information please contact the Public Works Department at 815-5012.
